By EDNA TROWBRIDGE ŏecececececececececececec

Viscount Hurleigh was dead, and his on inherited the title, with the entailed estates. Dowager Viscountess Hurleigh was now face to face with a family problem. Her son was provid-ed for, but she had a daughter, Gladys, for whom there was no pro-vision whatever and whom her mother considered entirely incapable of pro-viding for herself. Lady Gladys had she been born in America, where new fields are opening to women every day and where the daughters in wealthy families often work from mere preference, might have done very well. In England she was bound to be a failure. There is just as much especial fitness for society as any other department of life, and Lady Gladys Hurleigh did not possess such fitness When the young swells were brought up and introduced to her they got no response to their society chitchat and left her as soon as they could politely do so. Some Oxford or Cambridge professor might draw out what there was in her, but not the dancing man of the smart set, The dowager viscountess was a practical woman, who instinctively understood the laws of supply and de mand. American women of fortune were marrying titles in England, but she could not recall a single case of an Englishwoman of noble family marrying a rich American. British noblemen went to America for their wives. Why should not a British girl of a titled family go to America for a Letters of introduction were obtained to the social leaders of New York, and Lady Hurleigh sailed with her had heard of as existing in America. Lady Hurleigh knew that a request from her daughter was not to be denied and reluctantly consented. One morning Gladys and her mother, piloted by a gentleman and his wife, drove up before an enormous manufacturing concern and, alighting, entered the office, making a request to be shown the premises. At each department they were turned over to the foreman, who made such explanations of the machinery and processes as they asked for. One of these foremen, a young man of twenty-three or twentyfour, instead of allowing them to gape unintelligently at what they saw with out their asking explained everything.

Indeed, he made himself and what he spoke of interesting to all except the viscountess, who declined to be interested by any man in a suit of overalls. When they left his department Gladys was much pleased at the young man's offer to show them over the balance of the work and accepted it with thanks, She was somewhat surprised that he should encroach upon parts of the fac tory under other foremen, but he made no explanation of the matter, and it was soon forgotten in the interest he excited in what they were see When they were ushered out to their conveyance Lady Hurleigh dropped a silver dollar in the foreman's hand, much to her daughter's mortification. Seeing her embarrassment, he showed a delicacy far above his station by accepting the tip as a matter of course. This was the last visit Lady Hurleigh made with her daughter to any of the commercial or mechanical won-ders of America. After that she told Gladys that she might go where she liked if she would only cut it short so that they might get back to England, and in a few weeks they sailed for home. The poor woman had met with a great disappointment. At the opening of the next season when the "American invasion" of England, as the English people call the hegira of our tourists to Europe, began, persons whom Lady Hurleigh and her daughter had met in America commenced to send in their cards. The younger of these persons the viscountess left to her daughter to entertain. Gladys, who had been much pleased with the freshness, the absence of sham among the masses, that she had found in America, surprised her mother by doing the honors successfully. Indeed, Gladys was far more attentive to them than her mother considered necessary, for the older lady not having gained anything from her visit was disposed to let the visitors see England by themselves. Few young American men put in an appearance and these the viscountess left entirely to Gladys, seeing none of them herself. One day a Mr. Edwin Atherton called, and the card being taken to Lady Hurleigh, raising her glasses to read the name and not recognizing it, she sent it to her daughter with a sequest that she receive the Some time after that when Mr. Atherton called again, Gladys, who was dressing, asked her mother to go down and entertain him till she had finished her toilet. The viscountess did as she was asked, and though she felt sure she had seen Mr. Atherton before could not place him. Nevertheless, to the manner born, she greeted him as one she remembered perfectly, but was careful to keep the conversation on general topics that she should not betray her ignorance of his identity. Her daughter appearing, she turn-ed the guest over to her and, excusing herself, left the room.

It was not long before Lady Hurleigh noticed that Mr. Atherton was becoming a frequent caller. One day she asked Gladys who he was and where in America they had met him. But Gladys' identification was not especially clear, and her mother got but little satisfaction. The American's calls continuing and certain attentions coming from him to Gladys that indicated more than an ordinary interest, the fond mother made another effort to learn from her daughter something about him. All attempts failed, but after one of Mr. Atherton's calls, Gladys went to her mother radiantly happy and, handing her an American silve dollar, said:

"Mr. Atherton asked me to give this to you for one of your charities.' The viscountess looked at the dollar then at Gladys. Something in the girl's face excited a desire for further nformation.

"Do you remember, mother, when we were in America visiting a factory being shown over the premises by a foreman and you tipping him when we went away?"

"It seems to me I do." "Well, that's the identical dollar you ave him."

The mother looked stupefied, and the laughter continued:

"That foreman is the son and heir of the founder and principal owner of those works. In America, it seems, the sons of manufacturers sometimes go into their fathers' works to learn the business, occupying successively every post from the lowest grade. This Mr. Atherton is one of these persons. He has finished his apprenticeship and has come abroad on a vacation before assuming the vice presidency of the works of which his father is president'

Lady Hurleigh listened to this with intense interest. When Gladys had finished she said:

"Are you quite sure, daughter, that he has not come on any other account than a vacation?" "He has, mother," replied the daughter, blushing. "He has told me that, after having shown us the factory, he made a resolution that he would follow me to England with a view to winning me for his wife." "And you have accepted him?"

"I have." There were counter currents in the mother's heart. The idea of her daugh ter marrying a mechanic that she had seen in overalls and whom she had ight it proper to tip was a te daughter on her errand of conquest. I say her errand, for she had the good sense to keep her object a secret from Gladys, knowing that if the girl knew it she would flatly decline to go, and when Gladys put her foot down there was no lifting it. The mother intended to guide the way diplomatically, keeping her daughter so far as possible from scientists, literary men, artists—indeed, all who used their brains in fields that were considered unprofitable. As to merchants and manufacturers, they were not to be considered. She proposed to surround her candidate with the wealthy society men of New York, ready to take ad-vantage of any opportunity that might arise to supply Gladys' natural deficiency as a husband angler. As the mother had expected, she and her daughter as members of the British nobility received every attention in

New York, and the young men flocked about the young lady. But the men never got beyond a certain point. Gladys gave them an opportunity to show what of intrinsic value there was in them, and when it was apparent, as it was with most of them, that their brains were in their heels she shut herself up like a clam, and they soon dropped away from her. Her mother was disappointed. After spending a season without results Lady Hurleigh threw up the sponge and prepared to go back to England.

Then came a request from Gladys that they see something of those engineering and mechanical wonders that she 3 00

He says: "A serious skin disease broke out on my face powers of Zam-Buk. He says: "As serious skin disease broke out on my face and spread until I was in a terrible stete. The spots and little ulcers were fright-fully irritating, and yet when scratched or rubbed they bled and smarted. Shaving caused me agony, sometimes I would have to go two weeks without a shave. I tried home made remedies, herb salves, and various other prepar-ations, but the sores got no better. When Zam-Buk was mentioned I had little faith that it would be able to do me any good. My case seemed such an obstinate one. I gave it a fair trial, however, and the first box made such a wonderful change for the better that it gave me encouragement to continue. I did so, and to cut a long story short, Zam-Buk in the end quite cured me My face is now clear of all traces of the terrible disease, which troubled me for so long."

terrible disease, which troubled me for so long." Thousands of sufferers from eczema, blood poison, ulcers, chronic sores, piles, ringworm, cold sores, cuts, burns and tkin injuries, have been relieved and cured, as was Mr. Mahv, by Zam-Buk. As a balm for all skin injuries and diseases it is without equal. All drug-gists and stores at 50c box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Refuse harmful substitutes.

Soliciting the same liberal support that my predecessor received, I will endeavor to merit it.
