

The trees, the trees are bleak and bare,
And sorely shrunken from their prime,
The skeletons of what they were once well
In the rustling summer time.
Drearly wave the barren boughs,
Drearly shiver the twigs forlorn,
Underneath the leaden brows
Of a weary sky all winter worn.
Ah! the days have cheerless seeming,
Ah, the clouds are cold and gray;
Lone I wander dully dreaming,
Deeming thee a loiterer May.
