"It will be a great stimulus toward municipal betterment: It will offer the strongest argument ever advanced for the academic treatment of cities, larks, formal gardens and waterways. Designers of formal effects have un-consciously been catering for centu-ries to the aesthetic observer, who will now actually see the handicraft-from the designer's point of view. Let us look at the effect of aeronautics upon architecture. Man has up to this date lived upon the surface of the earth. It has been but natural that he should design his architecture to be seen from the surface view. "Now study it from this new aerial point of view. Among the considerations which will present themselves are the graceful modeling of the roof, as more generally seen at present in country houses, where the roof surfaces are are gracefully prededly where faces are gracefully modeled, where material is agreeable in color, texture, line—that is, where tile, slate or shin-gle is used instead of the flat noofs now generally so ugly, with their hidenow generally so ugly, with their hide-ous tin surfaces or smeared tar effects, ugly chimney pots and smelly, smoky ventilators. This latter class of roofs must be transformed and made agree-able to the passerby in the sky, if laid out like some of the recent roof gardens of our large hotels.

"I grant it is a difficult problem to design architecture to be seen from all points of view. But this is where the understanding and the cunning of the artist come in.

"General architecture will need to be so designed as to be artistic and beautiful when seen from above as well as from below." the artist come in.
