John Bunyan's Monument.

From the London Telegraph, June 10.

A marble statue of John Bunyan is to be inaugurated at Bedford this afternoon, amid all sorts of sacred and secular rejoicings. A Duke has presented the design to the townsmen, and the Rev. Dean of the Established Church—no less a Dean than Dr. Stanley—are to assist at the unveiling of the figure of the great Tinker; there is to be a public meeting afterwards, at which very distinguished orators will speak; and in the evening the Duke of Bedford will be present at a meeting to be delivered at Bunyan's Meeting-house, upon the life and works of the "illiterate seaman." All this takes place on or near the very spot where "well-nigh two centuries ago John Bunyan lay languishing twelve years and a half in prison, cast into that long and sad duration by the knaves and fools who had England in their control after the Restoration. Generally when a man has been dead two hundred years, and a movement is set on foot to raise a statue for him, some one or more of his countrymen, and some research by the journalist, in order to justify the proceeding. But Bunyan's case is different. He is not only a great writer, but a great man; and his life and works are so full of interest, and his death so noble, that he has been read him—be it the pilgrim progressing slowly and tearfully through the gloomy streets of the gloomy town of Bedford, or the noble hero of the great wars of the world. It is not only a great writer, but a great man; and his life and works are so full of interest, and his death so noble, that he has been read him—be it the pilgrim progressing slowly and tearfully through the gloomy streets of the gloomy town of Bedford, or the noble hero of the great wars of the world.

NOTES AND NEWS.

UNITED STATES.

An old business sign in Philadelphia many years ago read, "William Shot and Jonathan Bell."

At Humboldt, Ia., the grasshoppers have become so numerous that the citizens are getting their crop of sawlogs under cover.

We are obliged to inform our readers that it was Francis Butler, not Benjamin, who died of hydrophobia. It is better to tell the truth, whether welcome or not—Cleveland Times.

Failure is always costly. A Kentuckian, who went into the mortar coil shuffling business, was arrested and fined $5. If he had succeeded in killing himself he would have been in that pocket, you see.

The people of Parowan, Utah, are considerably excited over the discovery in a cave in that vicinity of two dead bodies—three males and two females. The Salt Lake Tribune insinuates that they are the victims of the Mormon doctrine of "blood atonement."

Local opinion has been agitating a lady of Austin, Nev. Her husband held her in "optional" with her whether he should buy her a glittering Bible or a new bonnet. She "rattled" with the subject for three whole days and then opted on the 3—Common.

Appleton's Journal for June 27 has a special attraction in the graphic illustration on "The New Harvard," most timely in this Memorial dedicating and Commencement season. Another good thing is Mr. Siedman's article on W. A. R., the humorist; and an editorial on "Blood atonement."

A couple of small thieves, on Wednesday, were driven to a steamer dock, in New York, in grand style by the city coachman, and going on board the outgoing vessel, went into a state room, stole $1,000 worth of money and jewelry, and then departed in the same gorgeous way.

That pure consciousness may sometimes be developed early has been often and too sadly proved. Among more recent instances is that of the young friend Pomroy, in Massachusetts. As has been the statement that David Martin, only twelve years of age, is under sentence of death in New Haven County, North Carolina, for the murder of a smaller boy whom he viciously drowned.

A most terrible misdeed was that committed on Monday, by Charles Coffin of West Newbury. He was about sixty years of age, and by trade a shoemaker. For some time he has threatened to take his life, and had day after day in the rear of his barn and with a razor nearly severed the throats of his wife and children. He had a wife and three children, and his life was a worthless one.

GENERAL.

Just now money is dreadfully scarce in the large cities; at least everybody is anxious to get into the country for a little change.

"Is it a sin, my father, said a belle to her confessor, 'to listen to men who say I am handsome?'" "Certainly, my child," said the abbe, "you ought never to encourage mischief."

Missionary's "Sign Painter," painted some seven years ago, was recently sold in London for £4,500. Another picture of the same artist, "The Guardsman," sold at the same time for £2,100.

The fifth or "Inkerman" volume, as it is called, of Mr. Kinglake's "Invasion of the Crimea," a work commenced about seven years ago, is announced for immediate publication.

Julius Janin wrote anywhere and anyhow; in cab, in cafe, amid the hubbub of the green room of every theatre, pinching and kissing ballet girls between the beginning and the end of a sentence.

A country curate complained to an old Dr. South that he received only five pounds for preaching a certain sermon at Oxford. "Five pounds!" said the doctor; "why, I wouldn't have preached that sermon for fifty."

Here's a chance. A correspondent says the widowed Queen Emma of the Sandwich Islands is thirty-five, good-looking, and altogether a woman of whom any husband might surely be proud.

We had better begin to pack our trunks and prospect for a new location if, as the Saturday Review obviously affirms, "there are changes beyond the power of man to arrest, and long before our planet has dropped into the sun, it will have become an unsuitable abode for civilized beings."

But where shall we go?

Mr. Bourke, Under Foreign Secretary, stated recently in the House of Commons that the chief obstacle to Egyptian reform was France, who hesitated to abandon the position she had acquired in Egypt. If she persisted in her refusal to conform with the views of the other Powers, the only course which remained for them would be to act without her.

The Duty of Forgiveness.

Some of our contemporaries have been making a great deal about what they call the Decher-Tilton scandal. We have read the documents, and all we can make out of the case definitely is that Mr. Beecher offended Mr. Tilton, and afterwards repented, asked his pardon, and received it. This was only once; but according to Scripture if he should do the same thing seventy times seven, and receive forgiveness each time, it would be Mr. Tilton's duty to grant it.

And considering that she is Tilton's wife and not other people's, cannot other people afford to forgive as well as Tilton?—N. Y. Sun.

Silver, Blue, Crimson and Green Enamel Frames with Gilt Veining at Notman's, dicte speaker to day can measure have passed into the popular sentiment the thoughts and words of John Bunyan. He has long ago attained that sublime literary success achieved by two or three only in each walk of literature, where the nation absorbs into itself the writer, and speaks and thinks him without being distinctly conscious of his teacher. The other great allegory of the English speech, Spenser's "Faerie Queen," is but a lovely, and to tell the truth, a somewhat tedious poem; the other immortal work, while the "Tinker's Fable" has been interpolated into holy thoughts and pious plurimangas by millions of human souls, on that passage which all alike understand through Vanity Fair, and into the Valley of the Shadow. All there was of vigorous faith and fearless spiritual insight in Puritanism shines in this book of the Bedfordshire enthusiast, together with the quaint imaginings of a real poet and the fervor of a Prophet. He has beaten the gold of his Bible out to glid every man's experience with his simple and his immortal words, and he has served innumerable simple spirits to content victoriously with their Apollyon. Here, and in the pellucid, luminous, perfect English which the Tinker learned from his Bible, is his real and imperishable monument; but assuredly, "if great men make little things famous, Bedford does well to-day to set up John Bunyan's statue, and to make a saint's day for itself out of the illiterate seaman's.
