have been sold; therefore the Actina treatment is not an experiment, but is reliable. The following letters are but samples of hundreds we receive:

F. W. Brooks, Bauchene, P. Q., Canada, writes:
Owing to having severely strained my eyes writing and checking at night, my eyes became very painful, and I could not bear the light. After using 'Actina' less than four months I can read and write as well as ever."

Amanda G. Dumphy, Narhwaak Village, N.B., Canada, writes: "I have used 'Actina' as directed and I can truly say it has done more for my eyes than I expected. I wore glasses for five years and suffered much pain. Since nsing 'Actina' I can sew or read without glasses and my eyes do not pain me."

John Krahmer, Ricketts, Pa., writes: "Several years ago my eyesight began to fail. Oculists prescribed glasses but I received little benefit from them. After several months' use of 'Actina' I could read and write by almost any kind of light. I would not take one hundred dollars for my "Actina."

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. Rvery member of the family can use the one "Actina" for any form of disease of the Hye, Rar, Throat or Head. One will last for years and is always ready for use.

"Actina" will be sent on trial, prepaid.

The Story of a Bargain Sale Bungle (A Police Court Idyll.)

HE court room was packed; there was not a square foot of standing room unoccupied. Magistrate Delaney had taken his seat on the bench, and with his wonted calm, addressed himself to the day's work. Rarely moved from his easy, self-possessed attitude, he betrayed a feeling of astonishment that morning as he su veyed the crowded court and noted the extreme lightness of the calendar before him. He consulted his papers again to make sure that he had overlooked nothing, but they merely suggested the usual petty cases and nothing of the notorious.

Had his worship been on the streets, however, when six-foot-four Magillighan escorted five-fut-wan Michael Doolin to the police station, he would probably have joined the crowd himself and found some recreation in honoring "Micky" with his attendance when the case was called.

The majesty of the law and the mutability of the law-breaker found a fitting embodiment in the manner in which the arrest of Mister Doolin had been conducted.

Constable Magillighan had been suddenly cut loose from the monotony of his habitual dead march by a messenger from the big store to say that the manager required his services.

It was to give him the custody of "that man" on a charge of stealing a ten dollar bill. Ordinarily, the arrest and sequel would have been a simple operation carried out quietly, solemnly, and without a single comment of protest. That is usually the case when the offender has been caught red-handed; but if ten thousand cats with tins at their tails had been given the freedom of the city, that were nothing to the hullabaloo of Micky's passage to the palais de justice."

For the first time in his life, in full view of the public eye, he was receiving his "baptism of fire" and the hundred and one hostilities that the public delight to shower upon the man in the pillory.

Micky's whole being blazed with the compliments his impotent rage heaped upon "ivery man uv thim." "Thim" was supposed to include every one who had in any way countenanced the persecu-tion of which poor Micky was the unfortunate victim.

Physically, Magillighan had the advantage of his prisoner, but he was hopelessly beaten the moment he tried to reason with the sizzling little Irishman. He might as well have tried to stop a high pressure water burst with a pint bottle cork.

A per-fervid Orangeman engaged on the local press had witnessed the proceedings from the back window of a bowling in the softest accent, a alley, and with some gratuitous local beamed with happiness.

color had embellished them in that morning's papers, till, as Magillighan said, one who had been there would never have recognized it as the same incident. Hence the attendance at court.

After the usual drunks had been disposed of, Micky stepped nimbly into the dock and looked around, even as an imprisoned terrier would regard a cat up a tree, or an inaccessible company of well fed rats enjoying their freedom. "Michael Doolin, you are charged with stealing from the premises of Sellus & o. a ten dollar bill belonging to the prosecutrix, Mary Mackenzie. Are you guilty or not guilty"

Prisoner, (striking a full E in the key of C sharp). "Not guilty, yer 'anner."

Al right Michael," said Mr. Delaney in a kindly tone; "we'll see what they've got to say about you and then you'll have every opportunity to put in a word in your own behalf." Constable Magillighan proved arrest stating that at 9.30 that morning he had been called into the store of Sellus & Co. where he found the prisoner detained. The prosecutrix complained that she had placed a ten dollar bill on the counter to pay for certain purchases she had made. While her attention was diverted by the clerk who was serving her, the bill disappeared. No one was near her except prisoner and a lady of position who was a well known customer, and was examining goods at the same counter.

Prisoner was detained in the manager's room, and acting on the latter's advice, prosecutrix gave Doolin in charge on suspicion of having taken the money.

When searched at the station he had in his possession five ten dollar bills, and ten cents. He also had a few articles of underclothing tied up in a napkin, and a copy of the "Tipperary Times."

The magistrate: "Have you any questions to ask the policeman?"

Prisoner: "No, yer 'anner, he only did his dooty, but oim innocent all the same as true's the Almighty's in hiven."

Prosecutrix—a buxom, blushing maiden just on the shady side of twenty, then stepped into the witness box, and after the usual formalities, testified in substance what the constable had stated. There was a bargain sale on and there were many people in the store. She was positive she placed the ten dollar bill on the counter, but she could not identify it except that it was one of the Bank of Ottawa's bills. (The whole of the bills found on prisoner were those of the Bank of Ottawa.)

She complained to the floor superintendent who came along at the moment she discovered her loss. After questioning the clerk, he detained the prisoner, who was walking away.

"Did you ax him to detain me?" eagerly inquired the prisoner.

"No." replied the little Scotchwoman. in the softest accent, and the prisoner
