

RUBEROID ROOFING

Trade Mark Registered.

Pronounce it RUE-BER-ROID.

Makes a One-Piece Roof

Water can't "back up" through a RUBEROID roof, for there's not a crack in it anywhere. The Ruberine Cement which goes between and over the joints makes the seams as tight and strong as any other part of the roof.

Easily laid—absolutely water-tight—weather-proof—strongly fire-resisting—RUBEROID Roofing has given perfect protection for years after its imitations have had to be replaced.

Ask your dealer to show you a sample of RUBEROID that lay 17 years on a foundry. Or write us and we will mail you a sample, with our straight-fact Booklet M on Roofing.

KELOWNA FRUIT LANDS (IRRIGATED)

Ready to plant; 5, 10 and 20 acre lots situated from 1/2 mile to 5 miles from the town of Kelowna (population 2,000) in the celebrated

OKANAGAN VALLEY, B.C.

These lands are practically level and the greater part plowed. Considering location, quality of soil, marketing facilities and climate, we feel safe in saying that they have no equal in British Columbia. Our irrigation system is of the most permanent nature, being all of steel pipe, steel flume and concrete lined ditches. The Kelowna District has definitely proven, time and again, by the winnings made at the different Fruit Exhibitions, that it grows a grade of fruit superior to that grown at any other point in British Columbia. Kelowna has the largest area of good level fruit land surrounding it of any other point in British Columbia. Good boating, bathing and fishing. Markets for our products unlimited and highest prices obtained.

Prices $200 per acre and upwards. Terms one-fourth cash, balance in three equal annual payments; interest at 6%.

Noggs gave her the rest of the missionary money. They bade her good-by and left.

Outside John Cooper said, "Have you left yourself any money to get home with, Lady Grandison?"

The Lady Noggs thrust her hand into her pocket, drew it out empty, and said with an air of dismay, "Oh, dear, I forgot all about that!" Then her face cleared. "But you'll lend it to me, won't you?"

"I'm taking you home," said John Cooper. "I'm going to see you to the end of this."

He took her to the station, saw to his neglected luggage, and they caught a train down to Stonorill. As they rattled along from the station in a fly they met two or three groups of searchers, for Villikins having returned without a rider, and William prudently lying low, the country was up, as it was well used to be, looking for the Lady Noggs. They reached the castle before news of her safety, and the Lady Noggs, dragging John Cooper with her, rushed into the ed fairly evenly into those who applauded and those who were shocked at the invasion of the sacred rights of the inviolable express. She herself was entirely defiant; she thoughtfully dropped William out of the affair and took the whole responsibility, repeating again and again more and more hotly, "I had to stop the beastly old train! I had to!"

In the end it was resolved that Mr. Borrodaile, her uncle's private secretary, should go to London on the morrow and deal with the railway company, and he said sadly, "This time, Noggs, it's a touch and go whether then send you to prison or not. They're rather besotted; and I've told you many times about the pitcher that went to the well too often."

"I don't care!" cried the Lady Noggs joyfully. "I shall go to the Tower—they'll have to send me there because I'm a peeress—and I shall escape, Billy; you see if I don't!"

"We know you will—we know you will, Noggs," said Mr. Borrodaile. "But the Tower will be anxious, not we."

Having gathered how that John Cooper hall to find her uncle in the middle of an anxious group of his guests concerning measures for her discovery.

"Oh, Uncle," she cried, "I'm so glad you're not at work! This is Mr. John P. Cooper, of New York City; and he's awfully interested in our old nobility—that's what he calls us. And he'll be so pleased to see you, because you must be a—a chief old noble. This is my uncle, Lord Errington, Mr. Cooper: he's Prime Minister."

"Oh, Felicia," groaned the Prime Minister. "What have you been doing? We have been so anxious about you; we thought—"

"Now what's the good of being anxious about me? I always come home some time!" cried the Lady Noggs in a bitterly aggrieved tone. "Somebody's always worrying. How was I to know that Liza's baby would get a pin in its throat, and I should have to flag the Northern Star, and take him to London? I hadn't time to tell anyone—I hadn't really."

A chorus of questions and exclamations rose on the air; and as the Lady Noggs unfolded her tale the group divid-had helped the Lady Noggs, the Prime Minister insisted that he should stay to dinner and sleep at the castle. In the morning, under the intelligent guidance of the Lady Noggs, he explored it from attic to basement. About noon a wire from Mrs. Cotteril set their minds at rest about the baby. After luncheon the Lady Noggs drove John Cooper to the station in her pony-cart, and having arranged to meet soon in London, they parted with every expression of mutual regard.

"Here! What's this you've given us now, waiter?"

"Whipped cream, sir."

"Humph! It certainly deserved whipping—it's bad enough!"
