DEMI - TASSE

When Armand Gets Gay

There once was a chap called Lavergne Who spoke out quite saucy and stern.

Said his Leader: "My boy
You will kindly employ Yourself in some other concern."

Then said this young man named Lavergne:

"Your counsel I promptly do spurn.
I stand by my friend
To the bitterest end
And for Party I don't give a darn."

Vogt's Angels

A small boy whose father belongs to the Mendelssohn Choir and who has heard a great deal during the last month about the doings of that famous organisation, asked the other evening how the angels occupied themselves in the abode of the blest.

"They sing and then I suppose they rest—and then they sing again," his maiden aunt informed him.

"Do you suppose Daddy's goin' there?" was the next question.

"Well—sometime" was the startled reply.

"I guess the angels will look pretty cheap when the Mendelssohn Choir gets there" was the youngster's next surmise. "My! Won't they holler when they get to Heaven!" Evidently the small boy has a most flattering estimate of the personal, as well as the artistic qualities of the champion choir.

A Blooming Joke

Several Conservative members of the Ontario Legislature were discussing the new Liberal Leader as the bland Brockvillian smiled across the House.

"He's the flower of his party," said one of them.

"Yes—the Graham flower," commented a second, while a third fell to the floor in a fit.

He Did Not Write

Said gentle George E. Foster
To Aylesworth, just and kind,
"We'd like to know, my worthy friend,

Why you had us in mind.
We want the stuff you wrote to Shep.

About the Foresters

Which made him get so awfully keen

And urge Commissioners

To find out where the money

Had come from in those deals

That really were the simplest thing

To raise such horrid squeals."

But Aylesworth winked serenely

And said: "It seems to me

The notes I wrote to Shepley

Were verbal—don't you see?"

The Soul of Wit

The shortest correspondence on record took place between Victor Hugo and his publisher, just after the publication of "Les Misérables." The poet, impatient to learn the success of the book, sent off a letter which contained nothing but a sign of interrogation—"?" He received the entirely satisfactory answer "!"

It is told of a certain statesman who likes direct methods that he pro-
