Feeding Sulphur to Cows

Can sulphur be fed to cows without damaging the milk for butter or cheese making? If so how should it be fed?—D. L.

making? It so how should it be feed—
L.

The continued administration of sulphur to milking cows would probably give odor to the milk. Sulphur is supposed to be excreted by the skin, but in milking animals it is probable it would be partly excreted by the lacteal apparatus and give its characteristic odor to the milk. At characteristic odor to the milk. At characteristic odor to the milk. At suffering from any disease for the cure of which sulphur is indicated it would be wise to give the drug unful the disease is cured even though it acted upon the milk. It may say that I do not know of any disease in cattle-fit which the continued administration of sulphur is indicated. The practice of feeding any drug to a healthy animal is very unwise. When sulphur is given it should be given in about 1 ox. doses, 3 times daily, either in damp food or in a little cold water as a dreuch. a drench.
