A despatch from Cape Town says that a severe battle has been fought at Leyden-burg, and the Boers have taken possession of the town.

of the town. The exportation of arms to the Orange Free States has been prohibited. The position in Basutoland is critical, owing to the defections of the Burghers. A despatch from Cape Town says tele-graph communication with General Colley has been cut off. The accepted explana-tion of this is that the Boers have sent a detachment to cut the wires at some point between this place and Newcastle. The fact is significant, and fears are entertained fact is significant, and fears are entertained that he may yet be surrounded and captured before aid can reach him.

It is stated that Menoti Garibaldi has been requested to accept the command of a corps of volunteers for the Transvaal.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY.

The fame of that mythical peeler who The tame of that mythical peeler who figures in popular minstrelsy in company with a frolicsome member of the genus capra is quite eclipsed by the recent per-formances of two "warriors bold," real, not imaginary, entities. The scene of the epic is the vicinity of renowned Athlone. A helated resident of that distingt mage for belated resident of that district was a few behated resident of that district was a few nights ago making his way homeward across the fields, when the sudden challenge smote his ear, "Stand, else we fire!" Think-ing those words were addressed to himself, the traveller halted accordingly, but he was the traveller halted accordingly, but he was a little mistaken. Casting his eyes in the direction whence the sound proceeded, he beheld two of her Majesty's forces, ser-gents in different arms of the service, form-ing square in the middle of a meadow. The only foe apparent was a placid cow, which, stirred by some unaccountable vaccine impulse, had made a demonstra-tion in the direction of our herces. The influences of the hour had evidently caused the pair of warriors to imagine that it was vaccine impulse, had made a demonstra-tion in the direction of our heroes. The influences of the hour had evidently caused the pair of warriors to imagine that it was some terrible energy was moving down upon them. Perhaps they had heard of the wooden horse of the Iliad, and not puo upon them. Perhaps they had heard of the wooden horse of the Iliad, and not un-naturally imagine that some such wile was being prepared for their destruction. The cow continued in advance, and the two gallants, exclaiming, "The Hirish murder-ers will kill us both," immediately fired on the cow. They discharged six rounds at it and then took to their heels, thinking, no doubt, a counte of Fenians were done at it and then took to their neers, thinking, no doubt, a couple of Fenians were done for. The owner of the cow was made aware of what happened, and closelv followed them to the military barracks, where they admitted they had shot something, but that they were attacked. How-ever, they returned with the owner and requesting him not to speak about it. L'Impartial des Alpes tells a St. Bernard dog story. Father Nicholas, a monk of the Grande-Chartreuse, once aide-de-camp to the Czar, was returning from Fourvoirie to his monastery, followed by a fine St. Bernard, to which he was greatly attached. As he walked on reading his breviary, he fell down a precipice. The dog presented himself at the monastery, and by plaintive barking and gestures did his best to tell the monks that sometheng was wrong. In the J. HORIX, Priest. J. HORIX, Priest. J. HORIX, Priest. Niagara, Jan. 19th, 1881.

By the recent death of Prince William of Wurtemberg's infant and only son, the succession to the Wurtemberg throne is again thrown open to the Roman Catholic branch of the reigning family--a fact which appears to be provocative of considerable popular uneasiness in that essen-tially Protestant realm. Should Prince William die without male issue, the heir winning die without male issue, the herr presumptive to the crown would be Duke Philip, a grandson of Louis Phillipe, king of the French, and married to a daughter of the Archduke Albrecht of Austria. The children of Duke Philip and the Archduchof the French, and married to a daughter of the Archduke Albrecht of Austria. The children of Duke Philip and the Archduch-ess Maria Theresa have been brought up Catholics.
