story Nellie went as usual to the store and, being anxious to bring about her aunt's conversion as sweedily as pos-sible, resolved to lose no chance of performing, acts of charity, however trivial, for those around her. Ellen was even more disagreeable than was even more disagreeable than usual, but Nellie suppressed her feeling of impatience and tried to show no resentment. At last closing time came, and as they stood in the cloak room preparing for departure Nellie overheard Ellen exclaiming to a companion who was near by: "Rita, what overheard Ellen exclaiming to a com-panion who was near by: "Rita, what ever shall I do? Mrs. Belmont ordered some goods here to day, and I forgot to send them when the parcel express went out. She is so particular, and makes a fuss over every trifle. She lives away out in Porter Avenue, and am in such a hurry home to night that I can not possibly go there. Mama is very ill, and the woman who is with her will leave at 7, whether I am home or not. I will have to leave it until morning and take the consequences. You had better not do that," said companion: "the last time that her companion: Belmont's were delayed she re-Mrs. Belmont's were delayed sho fused to take them at all, and Annie Carter was dismissed because she sold them and should have sent them." "What shall I do?" said Ellen, in despair. "Pardon me, Miss Thomas," said Nellie, "I could not help overhearing your conversation. If you will allow me, I shall be very glad to take the parcel for you. My own mother is an invalid, and I know how she would invalid, and I know how she would worry if I were late during one of her bad attacks, Besides, Porter Avenue is not much out of my way."

is not much out of my way."

Ellen blushed scarlet.
"You are very kind," she said.
"But it is a very large parcel, and I am afraid you will mind carrying it."
"Not at all," replied Nellie. "I' am stronger than I look, and should really be very glad to take it for you."

Ellen gave her the package, told her the number of the house, and for the first time the girls parted with a cor-first time the girls parted with a cordial good night, Nellie feeling that her enemy was won at last.

enemy was won at last.

Although she walked quickly the parcel was heavy, and the distance longer than she had thought, so that it was dark night when she reached Mrs. Belmont's residence. Her ring was answered by a servant, and, delivering the goods into her hands, Nellie turned to go, not noticing as she did urned to go, not noticing as she did so that her pearl rosary, which she thrust into the bosom of her dress, fell on the stone step and lay there glittering in the light of the electric lamp which shone from the gate post.

That evening when Mrs. Carson and her daughter knelt as usual to say the rosary Nellie noticed that her precious beads were missing, and thought that she must have dropped them in store or cloak room; she started unusually early next morning that she might search for them before the store was opened, her efforts were fruitless. Ellen assisted her, remarking as she did so:

nad fell

ved

the den

gan

My

rtu

hich

d in went when holy e up ne of her.

would

rayed

l en-lla on more

up in out the nd his being,

port of ablish-

at city

ook up

lained,

all the lenying

is purent she

of her

as ever

n their er with Thomas

f insulttimes it re so as she re-

kindness

g of our

"I hope you did not drop them near Mrs. Belmont's. They say that any-thing Catholic drives her into a frenzy.

Shortly after the commencement of business that morning the manager summoned the young ladies at the silk and velvet counters to his office. When they were assembled he in-

"Did any of you young ladies leave

"Did any of you young ladies leave a parcel of goods at Mrs. Belmont's, on Porter avenue, last evening?"

"I did," said Nellie, rising from her place and standing before him.

"How did that happen? Why was it not sent by the express?"

"It was forgotten until after he had gon?" varying the girl. "and we were gone," replied the girl, "and we were afraid Mrs. Belmont would be annoyed at the delay, so I left it there on Mrs. Belmont wishes to see at once the young lady who left the par-cel at her house last evening,' said the manager, glancing at a note which he held in his hand. "You will go

Mrs. Belmont. You may return to your duties, young ladies."
Nellie put on her hat and cloak like one in a dream. Just then Ellen Thomas entered the dressing room. "Where are you going, Miss Carson?' she asked.
Nellie told her what has happened.
"That is too had?' said Files.

"That is too bad," said Ellen. "I shall go at once to the manager and explain. I was over in the milliner's department matching some ribbon with this velvet, so I did not get the order.'

"There is no good in your saying anything about it. It is the one who brought the parcel, not the one who sent it, Mrs. Belmont wants. Don't worry about me, Miss Thomas; you are not to blame."

And Nellie set out, a little fearful, but hoping for the best.

The twilight shades of the October evening were settling over the city. The electric lamps burst into flame and irradiated the streets with their weird glare as if a host of radiant moons had lost their way and hung trembling over

Neither evening shadows nor glit-tering lights attracted any attention in Mrs. Belmont's beautiful home. The heavy curtains were drawn, the servants glided about with noiseless feet and a deeper shade hung over the mansion than that which the autumn twilight shed from the sky.

Mrs. Belmont's daughter lay dying, and the frantic mother hung over her pillow or peered up and down the room in a frenzy of grief. The doctor had promised to be here at 6 and wearily up the steps again, and about to re-enter the house when shout to re-enter the nouse when her foot struck against something. She stooped, picked it up. The electric lamp from the great entrance hall shone upon a rosary of pearl and gold. She gazed at it in amazement for a moment, read the name on the golden clasp: "My own name!" the ex-claimed. "Where did this come from? this a grace from my happy, innocent childhood, a ray of light for my sin-darkened soul." Falling on her knees she raised her tearful eyes to heaven.

"Great Queen of Heaven!" she cried, "save my child and I shall return to my faith so long abandoned." She hastened back to the sick room, placed the precious rosary about the neck of the unconscious girl and kneeling beside the bed prayed silently.

After a time the invalid's breathing became more regular, the fever flust died away and the sufferer slept. When the doctor made his appearance he was astonished at the change. He felt his patient's pulse carefully so as not to awaken her and declared that all the symptoms of fever had dis appeared.

"She will sleep for some hours," he said. "and when she awakes she will have a great craving for food. Give her all the nourishment you can and my services will be no longer neces-

When she had retired Mrs. Belmont threw herself again upon her knees, thanked the compassionate Mother of Mercy who had answered her prayer and renewed her resolution for future.

She looked at her watch. It was only 8 o'clock. Calling a servant she desired her to remain in the sick room. She went to her own apart ment and taking a dark cloak from her wardrobe, put it on, enveloped her head and face in a thick, dark veil and went noiselessly out. She walked rapidly through the dark streets until she reached a large, gloomy looking building. She range, the bell, and a lay Brother of the Order of St. Francis stood before her. "May I see one of the Fathers?"

He opened the door of the little reception room, and one of the religious soon made his appearance. To him soon made his appearance. To him Mrs. Belmont gave a history of her whole life, and begged his help in returning to the faithful practice of her religious duties. When she left the monastery it was with a happier heart than for many years, and with a province to come back on the morrow she mise to come back on the morrow, she turned her face homewards.

The sick girl still slept, and the servant sat beside her.
"Annie," said Mrs. Belmont, "who brought that parcel from Cartino's last evening?"

"A young lady, madam." "What did she look like?"

"Madam, she looked so much like Miss Eveleen that I was startled, and the very tone of her voice was the

Mrs. Belmont was very much puzzled, and at last resolved to ask for the young lady to be sent to her. The result of her requests we have already

When Nellie reached Porter Avenue her courage almost failed, but one look of Mrs. Belmont dispelled her fears, and explanations followed which filled both hearts with joy. The carriage was ordered, and together they went to Mrs. Carson's, stopping on the way at Cartoni's to inform him that Miss Carson's absence would be permanent, as Mrs. Belmont declared that her fortune henceforth should be shared with her twin sister.

In a short time the cottage in the dingy street was given up.

Mrs. Belmont resumed with new

Mrs. Belmont resumed with new fervor her neglected religious duties, and Eveleen, too, was instructed in the mysteries of the Catholic faith.

For Ellen Thomas the cousins ever had a warm welcome, for had she not been, in a measure, the means of bring-

VERSIONS OF THE BIBLE.

(CONTINUED.)

N. Y. Freeman's Journal. Mr. Jones. "You say, Let the reader judge." That is just what I want the reader to do. You and I cannot be good judges in our own case. Let the Biblical scholarship of the country pass judgment thereon. I will abide by its decision. If you can satisfactorily prove your translation to be the more correct I am ready to put aside that of the American Revised and accept that of the Vulgate."

That is very well, but your proposi-tion involves what logicians call an ignoratio elenchi, you mistake the real question. You want us to prove that St. Jerome's is a correct translation of st. Jerome's is a correct translation of a manuscript which he never saw. He translated from a copy much more ancient, nearer the Apostles, than any manuscripts existing now, or than any from which modern translations have been made; manuscripts that he called "old" in his time, namely, in the fourth century. His translation was accepted by the Biblical scholarship of his time, when Greek was better known than now, and when manuscript copies were purer and freer from errors incidto transcription that later copies ent to transcription that later St.

The question then is not whether St. Jerome's is a correct translation of a Jerome's a correct standard which he never saw, and which you admit to have been vitiated by the interpolation. have been vitiated by the little and have been vitiated by the little and of "For thine is the Kingdom, etc.," of "For thine is the Kingdom, etc.," transcription, or errors of malice, or of lefective judgment.

That the more modern manuscript used by the English Protestant translators was vitiated by interpolation you admit and try to explain away. A witness who is convicted o flaving falsified in matters you know of is not to be trusted in matters you know not of. What is true of a witness is equally true of a manuscript claimed to be correct copy of the original. If found false in one case its claim to be a correct copy is no longer valid. Such, according to your own admission, was the copy used by the English translat-After such admission is it not absurd in you to ask us to prove that St. Jerome's translation of an ancient correct copy of the original?

Mr. Jones. "Allow me to repeat that there is no contradiction between Matthew and Luke in the their rendering of the hanging of Judas as described in Matt. 27 5 and Acts 1 18."

cooy harmonizes with an admitted in-

We certainly allow you to repeat that there is no contradiction, but at the same time we reserve to curselves the right to repeat that there is a contradiction in the texts as given in both the Authorized and the Revised Protestant version of the Bible. Certainly Mattlew and Luke did not contradict each other, but your Protestant version makes them do so. In St. Jerome's translation of a more ancient copy of the original than that used by the English translators there is no contradic-tion, a proof of its greater reliability. Mr. Jones. "Each of the writers currence, and each gave truly the facts of the particular impressions made Each of the writers described the fact and the manner of Judas's death, and we who believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures must assume that they did not contradict each other. Assuming described a different phase of the oc-

this we are forced to the conclusion that the Protestant translation of the two texts referred to is erroneous, or that the manuscript from which it was made was defective, and that the ancient manuscript which St. Jerome translated was a correct copy, for in the former there is a contradiction, in the latter there is not.

Mr. Jones. "Matthew emphasized

Mr. Jones. "Matthew emphasized the hanging; Luke the effect, the falling forward from the end of a rope and bursting asunder. How make this out a contradiction?"

question is as to the words of the two texts and not as to your interpreta-tion and explanation of them. In the texts, as found in your version of the Bible, Matthew tells us that Judas hanged himself; Luke tells us he fell in a field and burst asunder. In the latter text there is no suggestion of a rope or of hanging. The contradiction in the texts of your version is evident. According to Matthew Judas was a sui cide; according to Luke he was the victim of an accident. As there is no such contradiction in St. Jerome's translation of these texts, we must conclude that the ancient copy of the original which he translated was more reli able than the copy used by your English translators.

Mr. Jones. "In order to make it a contradiction these writers would have to contradict themselves on the same point mentioned by each.

point mentioned by each."

Well, the point mentioned by each was the death of Judas. One gives hanging as the cause of his death, the other gives falling in a field and bursting asunder as the cause of his death, one makes him a suicide; the other, a victim of an accident. We do not say Matthew and Luke did this. But they are made to it by the Protestant translation of the Scriptures. ant translation of the Scriptures.

ant translation of the Scriptures.
You say there is no contradiction.
Suppose Matthew had said nothing about the death of Judas what impression would you get from the words in Acts 1-8. "This man (Judas) purchased a field with the reward of his iniquity and falling headlong he burst sunder and all his bowels gushed out Would you not conclude that he died the manager, glancing at a note which he held in his hand. "You will go immediately, Miss Carson, and if any mistake has been made you have only your own carelessness to blame for it and must suffer the consequences. We can not afford to lose a customer like Mrs. Relement. Van may return to clic Telegraph. you. Suppose, further, that Josephus or some contemporary historian had written, what Matthew did, that Judas hanged himself, would you not deem it necessary to reject his authority and prefer that of the inspired writer of the Acts, who said that Judas fell and burst asunder and all his bowels gushed out?

Mr. Jones. "If Luke stated that Judas burst asunder and Matthew had denied that fact and stated that he did defied that fact and stated that he did not burst asunder; then and only then would there be a contradiction, and your argument would be entitled to consideration. But this neither Mat-thew nor Luke has done, namely, con-

The "same point" is the death of Judas and the manner of it. Now a man who comes to his death by hanging cannot truthfully be said to come to his death by falling and bursting asuader. These two manners of death exclude each other. If one be true the other must be false, hence a contradiction.

Reason for Choice of Church.

The following story of why it was that one Seth Bonham, a farmer of Wayne county, Pa., cast in his lot with the Episcopalians after being blown by the winds of doctrine for twelve months is attributed to a Brooklyn doctor of divinity with a large church. Seth, after having been awak-ened in a Methodist revival, for a ear resisted importunities from his Methodist, Baptist Presbyterian friends to join them. Finally the word went round that Seth had decided to join the Episcopal Church. A Methodist brother expostulated and wanted to know why had promised to be here at 6 and in the Lord's prayer, but whether his is a correct translation of the more ancient manuscript used by him.

The question raised by your proposal to the stairs and listened. The door closed again and the servant brought up a parcel.

The poor mother could stand it no longer. She went to the door herself, ran down the stone steps and looked up and down the street. No carriage was in sight. She went

TO GOD OR TO CEASAR? Render to Casar the things that are Casar's and to God the things that are God's."

In these words of our divine Lord, He teaches us a great lesson, says St. Augustine, for as the coin bearing the image of the sovereign showed he had a claim on it, so man bearing the image of his Creator, God, shows that he belongs to Him and is to pay Him the tribute of his respect, love and obedi-

Cresar may stand for the world and all earthly things in contradistinction to God, heaven and the things of eternity, and to each we are to give their due. We have a double duty, therefore, to man and to God, to the world and to heaven, to time and eternity. The first of these duties is generally fulfilled, and more than fai-filled. We imbibe the spirit of the world easily, pay it our homage and serve it slavishly. It is not enough for man that he use this world as God intended as but a footstool to rise to something higher; that he pass through its tangled paths and hidden dangers on to that heaven of peace and rest He has prepared for him; but many make the means their end and live for this world instead of Heavenlive for created things rather than for their great Creator, and exclude God from their thoughts in their pre occu-pation with the things around them.

But the world did not make us, Casar is not our creator, this earth is not our home. This world soon passes away from us and with it all its vanities; and there will remain with us God alone, our Creator, our Judge, our God and our everlasting reward if we only serve Him.

He has stamped us with the image of Himself and we are the coin of the trib-ute due Him. We are the masterpieces of His hands. How wonderful is man! He shows something of the divine perfections. He resembles God naturally in His intellect and in His will. Man's mind compasses most of the things of earth. He can fathom the depths of the sea, and penetrate the farthest heavens. He can measure the stars and draw from the bowels of the earth its riches and treasures He can adopt all created things to his use and nothing seems to be beyond his knowledge or his power. And he has free will, and in this he is almost like God Himself. The will to do or not to do: the will to obey or not obey: the will to serve God for all His gifts, or to despise Him. Free will to act a noble, generous part to God and His fellow-creatures, or on the contrary to be selfish and unconcerned for any but himself—aye, free will to act cruel part and to hate God and men if he will and to do what he dare to jure them. But it is not alone through souls, and here we have not only our intellect and our will that we are like to God, but we resemble Him supernaturally through grace in our image of God in us, but have a partici pation of His divine nature, which by conformity on our part makes through virtues and goodness the very reflection of Himself. This is the perfect man, because the perfect image, and this is what God would have us always be, that He might behold in us the reflection of Himself, and hence be pleasing in His sight, and the homage we pay Him be a tribute worthy and acceptable.

But this resemblance, so grand and beautiful is soon effaced by sin. It destroys the supernatural and heavenly in us, and reduces us to the mere natural, the simple man of clay, of the earth earthly, and even our natural resemblance lessens when we break with God through sin, for intellect becomes dark and clouded and the will weak and varying, so the man is no longer the magnificent creature he was before he had turned from God. But oh, what havor sin cause sin in the soul: then the light of God's grace is extinguished, the power of His love is stayed; the soul is dead in the eyes of God, for His image is no longer visible, He fails to recognize his creature, He cannot bless it onger, He cannot g is no longer the limit of His thoughts nor the end of His designs, for the great outrage of sin has annihilated the existence of that soul in the divine mind, and all must be over with it forever un-less the inexhaustible merits of Christ's sacrifice on Calvary be applied to that soul and restore in it the image and likeness of God once more, and thus make it again the object of His mercy and His love. So in our souls we are made speci ally to the image of God and His in-scription is stamped on every part of them. But that resemblance once de-stroyed it requires a miracle, the miracle of His precious blood, to give it miracie of this precious blood, to give it back to us again.

But what if that image be lost a second and a third time by relapsing again and again? Will God restore it again? He may and He does restore it again and again, but will He always do so? Ah, no, dear brethren, we know there would be a limit to His mercy as well as an extent to His justice, and if we trifle with His goodness there must come a time when the cup of His wrath will be filled to overflowing and He must visit the vengeance of outraged justice on the head of him offending Him.

His image will then have gone out of that soul forever. Death and judgment will have overtaken him in his sins, and as in the case of the foolish virgins mentioned in the parable, the door of heaven will be closed against it forever. The soul will implore that He open it, as they did, but the same answer must come to him as for them—I know you not. I know you not. The image of God has gone out of that soul and He sees in it only the wreck and rain of its fallen greatness and must banish it forever from His presence.

Ah, dear readers, let us keep faithful to God and His claims upon us and give Him the tribute of our love and the honor of our obedience. Let us conform to the perfection of Himself as given us in the pattern of our divine Lord Who has shown us how to live and how to die, that we may be always pleasing to the Father in heaven and finally share with the blessed ones, the happiness of Beatific Vision forever.—Bishop Colton in Buffalo Catholic Standard and Times.

TYBURN AND ITS MARTYR-MEM-ORIES.

Tyburn in London is a place con-ecrated to Catholic devotion, for in Tyburn stood the gibbet where so many Catholic martyrs offered up their lives for the faith in the days when to be a Catholic was a capital crime in England. In his book "Tyburn and the English Martyrs," Dom Bede Camm, O. S. B., presents some interesting facts, the result of painstaking researches concerning Tyburn. The exact spot where the gallows stood at Tyburn, Dom Bede Camm tells us, is obably to be identified with the site the house at the south east corner of Connaught place. Quantities of human bones were found when Connaught-place was built. The gibbet stood on a small eminence. Tyburn toll - house (which was removed in 1829) subsequently stood on the spot. A gate crossed the road, and the site of this is still marked by a stone with the inscription, "Here stood Tyburn Gate," which is placed against the park railings, almost opposite the site of the gallows. In an old plan of London, dated 1708, Oxford street is called "Tyburn Road." It is described as lying "between St. Giles' Pound, east, and the lane leading to the gallows, west." Tyburn Convent then, does not appear to occupy the exact site of the gallows. But it is not many yards distant from the spot, and it doubtless straight it doubtless stands on ground which has been soaked with the blood of martyrs, and in which their sacred relics may still be buried. The devoted religious who have made their home at Tyburn devote themselves to prayers for the conversion of England. Beneath the chapel, where the Blessed Sacrament is perpetually exposed, is an oratory dedicated to the blessed martyrs, and enriched with their pictures and their relics .- Sacred Heart Review.

We attain to heaven by using this world well, though it is to pass away; we perfect our nature, not by undoing it, but by adding to it what is more than nature, and directing it toward aims higher than its own.

There is only one thing we are willing to have others share with us: it is our opinion .- Mignet.

SUCCESSFUL MOTHERS.

You will always find that the mo thers who are successful in bringing up familles of hearty, healthy child-ren are those who are careful to note the slightest evidence of illness and to check it at once. The wise mother gives her children Baby's Own Tablets at the first symptom of any childish ailment, and almost at once the little one is all right. Mrs. Thos. Stevenson 13 Bishop street, Halifax, N. S., says "it gives me pleasure to be able to speak of the great value of Baby's Own Tablets. I always give them to my children when they are ailing in any way, and they speedily make them well. I would advise every mother to keep the Tablets in the house." The Tablets allay teething irritation, cure colic and stomach troubles, prevent constipation, destroy worms, allay fevers and break up colds. They can be given safely to a new born child. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Dr. J. D. K-llogg's Dysentery Cordial is prepared from drugs known to the prof. ssion as theroughly reliable for the cure of cho.era, dysentery, diarrhea, griping pains and summer complaints. It has been used successfully by medical practitioners for a number of years with gratifying results. If suffering from any summer complaint it is just the medicine that will cure you. Try a bottle. It sells for 25 cents.

They are Carefully Prepared.—Pills

THEY ARE CAREFULLY PREPARED.—Pills which diss pate themselves in the stomach cannot be expected to have much effect upon the intestines and to overcome costiveness the medicine administered must influence the action of these cansls. Parmetees Vegetable Pills are so made under the supervision of experis, that the substance in them intended to operate on the intestines is retarded in action until they pass through the stomach to the bowels.

Eight cents a pound is what a young woman paid for twelve pounds of flesh.

She was thin and weak and paid one dollar for a bottle of Scott's Emulsion, and by taking regular doses had gained 25 cents post paid. twelve pounds in weight before the bottle was finished.

Eight cents a pound is cheap for such valuable material. Some pay more, some less, some get nothing for their money. You get your money's worth when you buy Scott's Emulsion.

We will send you a little
4. The Real Presence.
5. Answers to Popular Objections Against the Catholic Church.

SCOTT & BOWNE, CHEMISTS,

50c. and $1.00; all druggists.

is all salt pure, clean, crystals, and nothing but Educational.

BELLHVILLE BUSINESS

COLLEGE DESCRIPTION We teach full commacraint course, As well as full shorthand course.

Full civit service course.

Full selegraphy course. Our graduates in every depertments are to-day filling the best positions Write for catalogue. Address
J. FRITH JEFFENS, M. M. Address: Mellsville. Out. PRIMITADE

ASSUMPTION . COLLEGE EARDWICH, ONT.

THE STODIES EMBRACE THE OLASSO I ICAL and Commercial Courses. Terest including oil ordinary expenses, $155 par am units. For full particulars apply to MEY, D. OUSEING, C.E.

ST. JEROME'S COLLEGE BERLIN, ONT. CANADA (G.T.R.)

Commercial Course with Business College atures. High School or Academic Course — Prepag-tion for Professional Studies. tion for Professional Studies.
College or Arts Course — Preparation for Degrees and Seminaries.
Board and Tuition per Annum, $140.00. For Catalogue Address-REV. JOHN FEHRENBACH, C.R., Pres

THE FALL TERM AT THE Susiness of eggs

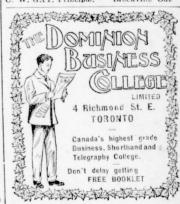

will begin on Thursday, Sept. 4th. will begin on Thursday, Sept. 4th. The large new wing, now being built to the College, will be completed and furnished during the holidays and will be opened on that date. The Northern is the only business college in Cauada owning a college building. The new wing will provide accommedation for 150 more students. Send for circular describing our courses of study which are, Business Course, Shorthand and Typewriting Course, Preparatory Course, Address; C. A. Fleming, Principal, Owen Sounds.

Desiness College. STRATFORD. ONT. The largest and best Commercial

School in Western Ontario. Catalogue free. ELLIOTT & MCLACHLAN, Principals.

Brockville Business College

WEFTY FIVE YEARS OF CONTINUED SUCCESS HAS MADE THIS COLLEGE A LEADER in SHORTHAND and BOOK KEEPING. Send for Catalogue, Address W: GAY, Principal; Brockville Ont

AT NORTHERN BUSINESS COLUEGE. AT NORTHERN BUSINESS COLI EGE. 3

Owen Sound, Ontario.

The Telegraphic Department is in charge of an operator of years of experience on the regular telegraphic lines. The equipment is the best that can be purchased, just the same instruments as are used on the regular lines by the large companies in United States and Canada. The course includes Telegraphy, Penmarship, Letter Writing and Spelling. For full particulars regarding any of our courses address. C. A. FLEMING Principal, Owen Sound, Ont.

Question Box

Owing to the increased cost of production, the publishers have been forced to advance the price of this book. In future it will be sold at

THE CATHOLIC RECORD, LONDON, CANADA.

Father Damen's L'ectures >

1. The Private Interpretation of the Bible. 2. The Catholic Church the Only True

Church of God. 3. Confession.

Price 15c. or $1.10 per doz., post paid. Special discount on lots of one hundred or more.

CATHOLIC RECORD OFFICE London, Ont.