

KAISER WORLD'S STINGIEST MAN

Played Market, Grafted, Manipulated, Made Over $12,000,000

BIG BRANDY MAKER

Has Now Curtailed Allowances to Sons—Book Tells the Tale

BERLIN, Aug. 3.—That Kaiser Bill was one of the world's stingiest men and amassed a private fortune of twelve and a half million dollars during his reign is shown in documented history of the Hohenzollerns under the auspices of the Majority Socialist party by Kurt Heintz, who spent years of studying in the archives. The book is published today and shows the Hohenzollerns, impoverished when William ascended the throne, became one of the world's wealthiest families, thanks to the Kaiser's investments and grafts.

In the first year of his reign the Kaiser saved $45,000 from his regular income. Immediately the Kaiser began playing the stock market, where, in the capacity of ruler, he could up-set prices or get real "tips." Among the Kaiser's investments were two companies which are now affiliated with American capital—the Hamburg-American line and the German General Electric. The archives show the Kaiser did not own Krupp stock but held their notes for several hundred thousand marks.

Just before the revolution the Kaiser had almost two million dollars invested in mortgages on Berlin homes. The archives show that the Hohenzollerns did not invest a fortune in German liberty bonds as claimed, but only $6,000,000, which is but a small fraction of the Kaiser's private wealth.

The archives show the Kaiser was one of the biggest brandy manufacturers, his fifteen estates producing half a million quarters, about a million and a half quarters of milk.

When the Kaiser fled he succeeded in taking 53 vans of furniture, 1,000 silver plates, 260 gilt silver plates and solid service for 100 guests.

Investigation shows the Kaiser now has curtailed his sons' allowances one-third. The Crown Princes are allowed $53,840 marks, which is just about enough for food, which even the Socialist export deplores.
