"Warr all shopkeepers to keep a lookout of the money they receive," was Dr. Talbot's comment to the constable. "Fresh $10 and $20 bills are not any too common in this town. And now about the murder which you draw that up, Harvey?"

"No. I did not know she had made one. I often spoke to her about the advisability of her doing so, but she always put me off. And now it seems that she had it drawn up in Boston. Could not trust her old friend with too many secrets, I suppose."

"So you don't know how her money has been left?"

"No more than you do."

Here an interruption occurred. The door opened, and a slim young man wearing spectacles came in. An air of him they all rose.

"Well?" eagerly inquired Dr. Talbot.

"Nothing new," answered the young man, with a consequential air. "The elder woman died from loss of blood consequent upon a blow given by a small, three-sided, stand-blower; the younger from a stroke of apoplexy induced by fright."

"Good! I am glad to hear my instincts were not at fault. Loss of blood, eh? Death, then, was not instantaneous?"

"No!"

"Strange!" fell from the lips of his two flatterers. "She lived, yet gave no alarm."

"None that was heard," suggested the young doctor, who was from an other town.

"Of it heard reached no ears but Philemon's," observed the constable. "Something must have taken him up stairs."

"The Mystery of Agatha Webb"

By KATHARINE GREEN

Copyright, 1900, by Katharine Green

CHAPTER X.

THE MAN WITH THE LONG BEARD.
Meanwhile in a small room of the courthouse a still more serious conversation was in progress. Dr. Talbot, Mr. Fenton and a certain able lawyer in town by the name of Harvey were in close discussion. The latter had broken the silence of years and was telling what he knew of Mrs. Webb's affairs.

"He was a shrewd man of unblemished reputation. When called upon to talk, he talked well, but he much preferred listening, and was, as now appeared, the safest repository of secrets to be found in all that region. He had been married three times and could still count 43 children around his board, one reason perhaps why he had learned to cultivate silence to such a degree. Happily the time had come for him to talk, and he talked. This is what he said:

"Some 16 years ago Philemon Webb came to me with a money loan which he said he wished to have me invest for his wife. It was the fruit of a small speculation of his, and he wanted it given unconditionally to her without her knowledge or that of the neighbors. I accordingly made out a deed of gift which he signed with joyful alacrity, and then, after due thought and careful investigation, I put the money into a new enterprise then being started in Boston. It was the best stroke of business I ever did in my life. At the end of a year it paid double, and after that time it paid great profits, the accumulated interest had reached such a sum that both Philemon and myself thought it wisest to let her know what she was worth and what was being done with the money. I was in hopes it would lead her to some change in her mode of living, which seemed to me out of keeping with her appearance and mental qualifications, while he, I imagine, looked for something more important still, a smile on the face which had somehow lost the trick of merriment, though it had never acquired that of ill nature. But we did not know Agatha, at least at that time."

"When she learned that she was rich, she looked at first as struck and then heart broken. Forgetting me, or ignoring me, it makes no matter which, she threw herself into Philemon's arms and wept, while he, poor faithful fellow, looked as distressed as if he had brought news of a failure instead of triumph success. I suppose she thought of her buried children and what the money would have been to her if they had lived; but she did not speak of them, nor am I quite sure they were in her thoughts when, after the first excitement was over, she drew back and said quietly, but in a tone of strong feeling to Philemon: 'You meant me a happy surprise; and it shall be so, Philemon. This is heart money. We will use it to make our townfolk happy:'"

"A pale blush came over her face, which was a purple calico. I remember it because of that look and because of the sad smile with which she followed his glance. 'Can we not afford now,' he ventured, 'a little show of luxury, or at least a ribbon or so for this beautiful throat of mine?' She did not answer him, but her look had a rare compassion in it, a compassion, strange to say, that seemed to be expended upon him rather than upon herself. Philemon swallowed his disappointment. 'Agatha is right,' he said to me. 'We do not need luxury, but we do not know how to far forget myself as to mention it. That was ten years ago, and every day since then her property has increased. I did not know then, and I do not know now, why they were both so anxious that all knowledge of their good fortune should be kept from me. I do not think, but that it was to be so kept was made very evident to me, and, notwithstanding all temptations to the contrary, I have refrained from uttering a word likely to give away their secret. The money, which to all appearance was to be kept from me, and untimely death, was interest money which I was delegated to deliver to her. I took it to her day before yesterday, and it was all in crisp, new notes, some of them twenties, but most of them tens and fives. I am free to say there was such another roll of fresh money in town.'"

"I beg pardon," said he, "for showing myself. I don't like to intrude into such company, but I have something to tell you which may be of use, sir, though it isn't any great thing either." "Something about the murder which has taken place?" asked the coroner in a milder tone. He knew Loton well and realized the advisability of encouragement in his case.

"The murder! Oh, I wouldn't presume to say anything about the murder. I'm not the man to stir up any such subject as that. It's about the money—or some money—more money than usually falls into my till. It—it was rather queer, sir, and I have felt the matter all day. Shall I tell you about it? It happened last night—late last night, sir, so late that I was in bed with my wife and had been snoring, she said, four hours."

"What money? New money? Crisp, fresh bills, Loton?" eagerly questioned Mr. Fenton.

$100 REWARD

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is internally acting directly upon the system, destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

WHY CATARRH IS DANGEROUS

Usually it comes with a cold. Being slight it is neglected—but the seed is sown for a dangerous harvest, perhaps consumption. To cure at once inhale Catarrhazone. It destroys the germ of Catarrh, clears away mucous, cleanses the passage of the nose and throat. The hacking cough and sneezing cold soon disappear and health is yours again. Nothing known for colds, catarrh and throat trouble that is so curative as Catarrhazone. It cures by a new method that has never yet failed. At all dealers, 25c and $1.00. Get Catarrhazone—now, to-day.

All women are born equal but they don't look it in bathing suits.
