Claremont Summers

BY
 Mrs. Emerson Marcy
 Kilbride, Ontario

"If you fall in love with a man with money, why, you just can't help it. Now my young—Oh my, I nearly told you, forgetting you were a perfect stranger," and Velma Richmond blushed nicely. "Well, if you can keep a secret, why, I will tell you."

"I can keep a secret, Miss Richmond."

"Claremont Summers is his name." Gladys just then remembered leaving her handkerchief in another part of the room. The light had suddenly gone out of Gladys Markland's life.

"Well, Miss Richmond, I must congratulate you on your good fortune in getting so fine a gentleman."

Velma thought to herself, "I guess the arrow struck alright. She don't seem so easy minded as she did when I first came in the room. I noticed a tear just now, which she can hardly suppress."

"Well, really, Mrs. Markland, I must be going. I have certainly had an enjoyable afternoon with you and your daughter. Goodbye Miss and Mrs. Markland."

While Miss Richmond was in the room Mrs. Markland had received a letter with a foreign stamp on it.

"I don't owe any bills," she thought to herself, and put the letter away not opened and forgot all about it.

Gladys was reflecting on the news she had received from Velma. "On Friday he was to come to see me, Now I won't receive another person's finance."

Tea over, Mrs. Markland helped to clear away the dishes, and was thus engaged when she heard someone coming up the walk and ring the door bell at the front vigorously. Mrs. Markland opened the door and stood Mr. Summers' servant, Sambo.

"Could I bring in young Mr. Summers? He has been hurt, fell from his horse."

"Yes, you may bring in your master."

Gladys had, by that time heard what was going on, and hurried away to get the spare bed ready.

Strange men carried Claremont Summers into the Markland cottage. Behind walked a doctor who had been hastily summoned. "Brain fever, must not be moved," were the doctor's words. "He has been badly hurt, fell from a horse I suppose."

"Yes, doctor," and Sambo was all a shake. "I saw him fall, doctor."

"I will take care of him, doctor, no nurse is needed."

"Very well then."

Gladys waited on her patient just as though he did not belong to another.

Mrs. Summers came in a closed carriage to take her son home. Mr. Summers, Sr. was away on business for a few days. But the doctor had ordered otherwise, so poor Mrs. Summers had to go home without him.

On the next day the patient seemed about the same. Gladys could stand and watch him for he was not conscious.
