OIL WELL IN THE SEA

A CURIOUS SPOT OFF THE LOWER CALIFORNIA COAST.

Old Seaman's Story of How It Once Saved a Tacht That Was Running to Almost Certain Destruction in a Howling Storm.

"No, I've never seen a sea serpent, but old sea captain.

"What was the curiousest thing I ever see? Well, that's hard to say, but there's the cruise I made from San Diego to Monterey with the yacht Foam—I'll never forget it, though it was years ago.

A lot of us aboard knew Sampson, and those of us who had met young Lonsdale in "The moment she got head to the sea he let go the anchor. The Lord knows how deep it was. Out went the chain, then the hawser, and we began to drift astern, beaten back by the sea and wind. "I began to think we'd have to cut tway when what was next to a miracle happened. The sea went down like mag-We were still in a heavy sea, but the surface for 100 feet about us was as professional player of cards. For our pains we were told that we were too smooth as glass, and there we lay as comfortable and dry as you please, while onfoundedly officious.
"At any rate, when the steamer was "Well," said the old captain, pausing a drawing near the shore, Lonsdale decided that he had had enough. Several of us moment at the recollection, "it scared the men half to death. They all thought there was something uncanny about it, but finally, when everything had been made snug, the mate came down below, laughing over what he called his snug

"We're all right if the anchor holds," he said, 'and it's pretty sure to, as it's rocky bottom.'

"I've known this for a long time,' he continued. You see, this is a great oil country, and right here, two miles effly. He was a man who never betrayed shore, is an oil spring that would be a fortune to some one ashore. It is probably a fresh water stream that rushes apward, bringing oil with it, spreads out over the surface, at times covering 400 or 500 feet. Of course, the you have employed skill alone?' inquired Lonsdale courteously. "'At your suggestion,' replied Sampoil keeps the sea down-simple enough when you know it.'

"And so it was," said the skipper. "I've visited the place several times, and some days you saw the water rising up so hard that the surface looked higher than the rest, and the oil would cover the wa-ter for 200 or 300 feet around, changing with the days and seasons seemingly, sometimes being very small, again large, but always making a perfectly smooth spot in which a boat could lie in a storm, if she could be kept in it. .

"It's about two miles offshore, as near as I can judge, and on a line with the Santa Barbara point north of the city and San Miguel island. All this country underlaid with oil and asphaltum, and they are boring wells as far out into the water as they can get.

"We lay in that floating oil patch all night; then the wind let up, and we got sail on her and went on."

Old sailors on the Atlantic, especially those on the south coast east of Florida, know a similar spring that has often surprised seamen.

rised seamen. It is told that a smack which had sailed from Mystic, Conn., for Florida had been beaten back by the heavy winds so long beaten back by the heavy winds so long that the water casks gave out, and they were in bad shape. But one day the skipper ran inshore about a mile or two from the reef, and, lowering a keg into a small boat, rowed to a spot in the open ocean, which he had found by certain points on shore, and told the men to fill the keg. They thought the old man was daft, but when they saw him drink some of the water, dipping it out of the ocean, of the water, dipping it out of the ocean, they tried it themselves and found that they tried it themselves and found that it was pure fresh water.

The captain explained that it was a spring which came up so violently that it forced the salt water away, leaving a volume of fresh water which could be used by those who wished it and knew where it was.
