The changes in the financial world within the past year have been sharp and decisive. From the greatest optimism and apparent prescript, ine United States is particular, and Canada to a lesser degree, have failout to a condition of possimism. Fortunately, the condition in Canada, as compared with larger countries, shows up remarkably well. There is no lack of confidence in our financial institutions, akhoug probably much of the stringency and check to business here is accounted for by mistakes made on the part of the same countend been displayed twelve and eighteen months ago that is at present one of the features in financial and connercial business, conditions would have been different. However, there is a feeling that Canada will rise to the occasion, and will be benefited by the temporary unsettled date due to waning confidence. The development of the country the past decade has been encormous. It was largely due to this fact that compactely urmay leading innanciars became too common. Gredit became too cheap, and there was a lack of discrimination in its dispensation, Bankers and brokers made loans on the most questionable security, while to-day their cars are deaf to proposal ions of real merit backed by undowbted securities. Thus America, which at one time took a large proportion of the Sicilian output, now imports very little.
