L. BLACK'S CO'S

spherical Spectacles

AND BY GLASSES

ARE the best for the preservation of the sight, and took the medal at the Montreal Exhibition.

The lenses are made of the best material, uniform in density, and of high refractive power, their perfect polished spherical shape adapt them to each eye to improve the sight of the wearer.

The eye being the most delicate organ of the body, it is not enough that the glass be of the right form, but the lenses must be perfectly centered and in many cases perfect relief is only given by having each eye fitted separately.

To effect this the lenses are made interchangeable, and having an Optician to measure the sight, a perfect fit is guaranteed.

Call and examine before purchasing any other kind.

IVANHOE.

(BY SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.)

"How much is there?" demanded the robber.

"Two hundred zee-chins," said the bandit; "your master hath dealt liberally by the vanquished, and put them to a cheap ransom. Name those who have paid the gold."

Gueth did so.

"The armor and horse of the Templar Brian de Bois-Guilbert, at what ransom were they held? Thou see'st thou canst not deceive me."

"My master," replied Gueth, "will take nought from the Templar save his life's blood. They are on terms of mortal defiance, and cannot hold courteous intercourse together."

"Indeed!" repeated the robber, and paused after he had said the word. "And what wert thou now doing at Ashby with such a charge in thy custody?"

"I went thither to render to Isaac the Jew of York," replied Gueth, "the price of a suit of armor with which he fitted out my master for this tournament."

"And how much didst thou pay to Isaac? Methinks, to judge by weight, there is still two hundred zee-chins in that pouch."

"I paid to Isaac," said the Saxon, "eighty zee-chins, and he returned to me a hundred in lieu thereof."

"How! what!" exclaimed the robber, "darest thou rifle with us, that thou tellest such improbable lies?"

"What I tell you," said Gueth, "is as true as the moon is in heaven. You will find it the just sum in a silken purse within the leathern pouch, and separate from the rest of the gold."

"Bethink thee, man," said the Captain, "thou speakest of a Jew—of an Israelite,—as unfit to restore gold, as the dry sand of his deserts to return the cup of water which the pilgrim spills upon them."

"There is no more mercy in them," said another of the banditti, "than in an unbridled sheriff's officer."

"It is, however, as I say," said Gueth.

"Strike a light instantly," said the Captain, "I will examine this said purse; and if it be as this fellow says, the Jew's bounty is little less miraculous than the stream which relieved his father in the wilderness."

A light was procured accordingly, and the robber proceeded to examine the purse. The others crowded around him, and even two who had hold of Gueth, relaxed their grasp while they stretched their necks to see the search.

Availing himself of their negligence by a sudden exertion of strength and activity, Gueth shook himself free of their hold, and might have escaped, could he have resolved to leave his master's property behind him. But such was no part of his intention. He wrenched a quarter-staff from one of the fellows, struck down the Captain, who was altogether unaware of his purpose, and had well-nigh repossessed himself of the pouch and treasure. The thieves, however, were too nimble for him, and again secured both the bag and the trusty Gueth.

"Knave!" said the Captain, getting up, "thou hast broken my head; and with other men of our sort thou wouldst fare the worse for thy insolence. But thou shalt know thy fate instantly. First let us speak of the matter; the knight's matters must go before the squire's, according to the due order of chivalry. Stand thou fast in the meantime—if thou stir again, thou shalt have that which will make thee quiet for thy life—Comrades!" he then said, addressing his gang.

"This purse is embroiled with Hebrew characters, and I will believe the yeoman's tale is true. The errant knight, his master, must needs pass us toll-free. He is too like ourselves for us to make booty of him, since dogs should not worry dogs where wolves and foxes are to be found in abundance."

"Like us?" answered the gang; "I should to hear how that is made good."

"Why, thou fool," answered the Captain, "he is not poor and disinherited as we are? Dost he not win his substance at the sword's point as we do? Hath he not beaten even as we would beat them, if we could? Is he not the enemy to life and death of Brian-de-Bois-Guilbert, whom we have so much reason to love? And were all this otherwise, wouldst thou have us show a worse conscience than an unbeliever, a Hebrew Jew?"

"Nay, that were a shame," muttered the other fellow; "and yet when I served in the band of stout old Gandelyn, we had no such scruples of conscience. And this insolent peasant—he, too, I warrant me, is too to be dismissed scathless!"
