ROSE OF VENICE; A STORY OF Love, Hatred & Remorse.

CHAPTER I. (CONTINUED) "Signora, my carriage is waiting opposite the principal door. I cannot allow you to enter my home in such a storm. I beg of you to accept it."

CHAPTER II. A STABBER HEARD.

As soon as Marco heard from his daughter of the young man's politeness, he set on foot inquiries about him. He ascertained that he was the son of the learned Contessa Sofia Bernardi, who he knew had settled in Lunenburg, and he consequently asked for an introduction to her, in order to thank the source for her attention.

CHAPTER III. THE FACTS.

On the following day, he returned this visit, was introduced to her, and she became one of the most assiduous frequenters of the Palazzo Centofoglio. The fact is, that as soon as he saw Rosa, he loved her, and she returned his love with all the warmth of her affectionate heart.

CHAPTER IV. KINDRED SPIRITS. Marco Centofoglio and Rosa passed the spring, summer, and part of the autumn at their villa, and about the middle of October returned to Lunenburg for the winter. The first friend to welcome their arrival was Count Guido Bernardi.

CHAPTER V. THE WEDDING.

Just as Antonio Foccarini and Rosa Centofoglio were entering the reception-hall, Count Guido Bernardi was stepping from a gondola. In his coat he carried a bundle of papers, and he was immediately recognized by the young couple.
