Mas. Stranar.—The evidence given at the trial of the conspirators thus far is most strong against Mrs. Surratt. Her house was a reedezvous of Booth, Harold, and all the implicated ones. And it is detailed that she was aware of "shooting irons" and such toys being stored in a wayside tavern, for the use and protection of Booth and Harold in their flight after the murder. It was at this tavern, kept by one Lloyd, that Booth and Harold called on the night of the assassination and procured a carbine and two bottles of whiskey.

IMPROVEMENTS ON THE GREAT WESTERN.—
The managers on the Great Western Railway have recently put upon the track a number of superb first-class carriages, designated as palace cars. The new carriages are fitted up in a style of surpassing elegance, and a number of new improvements conducing to the comfort of passengers are introduced in their construction, rendering them the most comfertable and magnificent railway carriages to be found upon the continent. The new cars are now daily attached to every express train going over the road.—[Hamilton Times.

A daring attempt to swindle a Chicago banker out of $10,000 was recently attempted in Chicago, by an individual who personated Gen. Hanceck in full uniform. A forged letter from Mr. Orden, the railway king, and a forged telegraphic telegraphic despatch from Jay Cookes, were brought to bear on the banker, but he was only deceived for a short time by the pseudo general, and the roque finally went away without his meney.
