PARIS FASHION EXPERTS ON THE FIRING LINE!

A Montreal paper says:—
"There are no fall fashions this year, and there are fifty thousand. Poiret has gone to the war. All the other Paris fashion experts are with him on the firing line. The shutters are up on all the shops of the Avenue de l'Opera and the Rue de la Paix, and the Canadian and American designers and buyers have come scampering home. There is nothing for them to remain in Paris for. There are no fashions for them to bring over."

"And so we appear to be fumbling along in utter darkness so far as the fashions are concerned. The designer of every big firm on the continent has cut loose with an idea of his own. Formerly he was content to follow the lead of the Parisian artist. Certain styles there were which had received the stamp of Paris approval and the Canadian designers followed along these lines. Now it is a question of individual taste—sometimes a question of individual lack of taste. Every dressmaker follows her own or her customer's preference in color and cut, and the result is that there appear to be almost as many styles this fall as there are women to wear them."

But what has all this to do with the woman who will forego the expense of a new costume this fall? Her reputation as a good dresser will remain intact provided she has her last season's apparel Dry Cleaned at
