THE RULING. If when placing a corner kick, the player, instead of directing it on the goal prefers to play it towards his own goal to enable, for instance, his full back line to try a shot, then the assembled players who are naturally near the goal mouth could be ruled off-sides. This is a matter which of necessity is left to the discretion of the referee. Of course, if the corner kick were placed directly on the goal. no off-sides could be given as this is
