Business on the London Stock Exchange during the past week was at a standstill. The heavy charges at the last settlement led to a general closing of accounts. Adverse reports prevail regarding expected failures on the exchange owing to heavy losses through forced realizations of new issues. There was a general fall of English railway scentrities averaging 2 per cent. In American railroads there was little doing, Yesterday's dealings, however, showed a slight general advance. Business on the Paris Bourse was limited. The tone of the market was good however. On the Berlin Boerse business was restricted, but prices remained steady. The Frankford Boerse was quiet.

Advices of Jan. Il state: We have still to report a very unsatisfactory demand, and there is not the slightest activity or spirit in bidding; even very fine and choice parcels having to be forced very much by sellers to be sold at all. Poor and inferior fruit is scarcely looked at thas always been our endeavor to point our oshippers the folly of sending anything but really choice, sound fruit, as any other only auses certain loss, but shippers will persist in sending poor stock forward, and the conse causes certain loss, but shippers will persist in sending poor stock forward, and the consequence is disaster. What really good stock we have had here this week would have sold much better than it has, had it not been for the amount of badly-packed and inferior fruit forwarded, which made buyers suspicious of what was really good. We think the market will recover itself and paying prices be obtained if shippers will send nothing but fine, freshpacked fruit. Incondiarism Stopped in Time.

A most cowardly outrage was attempted resterday evening, the intended victim beng a widow named Mrs. Fountain, living on Hill street. She, with the rest of the usehold, went to the Grey Street Church eaving their house unprotected. Some leaving their house unprotected. Some time after they had left, a little girl named Phenix, living next door, happened to come out of doors and noticed smoke issuing from under the front step of the Fountain house. The child rushed back and told her mother, who secured the help of her family and Mr. William Dean, a teamster in the employ of Ald. Jones. After a few minutes hard pumping the fire was put out. Word was sent to the Grey Street Church and the family in great alarm hurried home to find the blaze extinguished. There is no doubt that the fire was incendiary as the front steps had been lifted up and straw and coal oil were placed underneath. Had it not been for the timely arrival of the child who first saw the fire, the house would have been destroyed before anything could have been done. The perpetrator of the outrage will probably meet with the punishment he deserves should his identity be discovered.

"This is too much, Major," said the doc tor, gettingangry; "you seem to have taker the most insane fancy for appropriating my family—first, you claim my daughter, now my wife, and next, perhaps, you will insist that I am your long-lost brother."

"Never; I don't want any brother no mother, as I have both—but a son or adaughter, with apreference for a son. Ah? he exclaimed excitedly, pulling out a long flat pocketbook and fumbling in it ner yously.

"What now?" inquired Rayburn, recovering his urbanity.

"The letter? Why did I never think of 'What letter ?"

"What letter?"

"Ah, here it is," said Smith, carefully unfolding a slip of paper, yellow with age and worn with long folding, "the letter to my mother—her last."

"Your mother's?"

"No, my wife's."

Smith handed it to the doctor, who had no sooner glanced at it than a shiver passed over his frame, he turned white, and in a faint voice gasped:

"My God!"
