Wil looked up in surprise and searched his friend's face with a keen glance. "I couldn't offer my congratulations with the crowd this morning," Philip went on, "but I hope they are none the less acceptable coming at this hour." "No." Wil replied, his face lighting up as he grasped his friend's hand, "I was only afraid I should not have them at all. But a change had come over Arley Wentworth since the engagement of her friend had been announced. Hitherto she had always been the first to notice and hail the appearance of Philip Paxton in the drawing-room, and nearly always managed by some pretty pretext or other to claim his at tention, and, by her light badinage and repartee, keep him chained to her side until Wil could secure Lady Elaine to himself. When, however, the engagement was announced that morning, she had sho one furtive, triumphant glance at the discomfited suitor, and then heaved a sigh of relief, which had in it something of pain as well. "Well, my strategic campaign is a an end, and I am glad of it. I don' believe. I could have kept it in much longer," she said, and there was a worn, weary expression on her young face, which, had anyone seen it, might have led to suspect that, perhaps, sh had sustained some wounds in the bat

But when Lady Elaine went upstairs she ran into her room with a radian

"You darling," she cried, winding he arms about her waist and giving her a delightful little hug. "So you've struck your colors at last. Here I have been maneuvering for this very thing for a long time, and mentally scolding you for your obstinacy all the while." "My obstinacy?" Lady Elaine cried, blushing with confusion, though a happy smile wreathed her red line. "Yes, your obstinacy. You persisted in keeping aloof from Wil unless he almost forced himself upon you: and of Mr. Paxton, though it made Wi perfectly wretched, and besides all that, when it was expressly understood that was to be my especial cavalier here were your eyes, that you could ot see that your handsome lover was nearly distracted with envy and jeal-

"I don't care what anyone thinks now Wil," she said defiantly. "I knew from the first," she ran on, "that he was over head and ears in love with you, and that his life would be ruined if he lost you, and besides--' "Besides what, dear?" her companion asked, as she hesitated and looked up "I knew that you loved him, and I thought it too bad that a lovely romance should be spoiled just for the want of a little maneuvering; yes, I will confess it now," she continued in several years together, there has been reply to Lady Elaine's look of surprise. 'I have interposed in every way to help you and Wil along-I pounced upon your would-be knight whenever I saw him approaching 'with malice aforethought,' and bore him away captive, bound with invisible chains; I assure you, you have no idea what an accomplished strategist I have grown weeks. You were right the other day -I did set a little trap for you and you fell into it charmingly. If I had found that you did not love Wil I should, of course, have allowed matters to go on as they would, and Philip Paxton might have won you and welcome if he could. But it is a load off my mind to have the thing settled, and just as it should be, too. I know you will be delightfulfor Wil is a jewel and you're another; so take my blessing, and joy go with it forever.' The gay girl rattled this off with a merriment which was very unnatural, and as soon as she had finished she gave her fair companion a hasty kiss, and then bounded out of the room without giving her any oppor-

KOMOKA.

Komoka, July 16.-The social under the auspices of the Young People's Society of the Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday evening, was a complete success, Rev. W. A. Wyllie, acting as chairman for the evening. A good programme was given, during which the following address was read by Miss Bynia Stewart, accom-

"To Rev. W. A. Wyllie: Dear Pastor We, the members and adherents of the Presbyterian Church of Komoka, have for some time been desirous of showing cause we realize, however, that to m kind 'no chastening seemeth, for sharing others' burdens, that we ask ye present, joyous, but grievous.' It is because Godo has given us an example of to accept this small token of our sympathy. At the same time, we rejoice that God in his goodness has been pleased to Mr. Wyllie, although very much sur-prised, made a very suitable reply, and Toronto, spent a short time with relatives and friends here.
