At the non-jury sittings before Mr.
Justice MacMahon, Rose v. McLean, another case about the use of a name, was heard. George McLean Rose, the plaintiff, who trades as Hunter, Rose & Co., says that for eight years he has published a monthly journal entitled "The Canadian Bookseller and Library Journal," but more generally known as the "Canadian Bookseller and Library Journal," but more generally known as the "Canadian Bookseller and Libring Company, published at the same time a rival journal known as "Books and Notions." Suddenly last March the defendants commenced to publish a journal under the name of "The Canadian Bookseller and Sta-March the defendants commenced to publish a journal under the name of "The Canadian Bookseller and Stationer," and the plaintiff now asks that they be restrained from publishing the last named journal and for damages. The defendants say the plaintiff is not the proprietor of the "Canadian Bookseller," nor has he any right to the exclusive use of the name; that their new journal is different from the plaintiff's in size, form, color and general new journal is different from the plaintiff's in size, form, color and general appearance. They further allege that plaintiff's journal has no bona fide paid circulation, but is only a house circular for advertising his goods and wares, and contains only sufficient reading matter to induce readers to look at advertisements, and also to procure free transmission through the mails, while the defendants' journal is a bona fide trade journal devoted entirely to the interests of bookselling, and cognate trades. They further say that plaintiff actually has tried to copy their good journal since the commencement of this action and certainly he has sustained no damage. Mr. Kappele appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. Leevesconte for defendants, Judgment research to be delivered on Tuesdey.

The English visible decreased 1,300,000 bush. Export sales to-day about 12 loads, mostly spring wheat. Speculation in our market continues stuggish, because sentiment in the trade is still largely under the influence of the large movement in spring wheat in the Northwest, which has been the dominant factor in the Situation for many weeks. Although there is less bear pressure on the market at present, it is believed that there is a large short interest still open, and any important buying would doubtless start a material rise in prices, for it would not only frighten shorts into covering, but would bring in good buying the cover rules from $7$ to $7.50 At New York cotton was very strong, closing at highest prices;
