

All the good in a human heart can never die.

You cannot denude a woman of her masked thoughts.

Diplomacy is cultivated in men and bred in women.

**

He who would pluck contentment must abandon force.

To console a widow is more agreeable than to court a maid.

The man who stains the purity of a woman tarnishes his own soul.

**

It is difficult to distinguish the fleshy lie from the ghostly truth.

**

The private ownership of land is crystalized in the question "Is the unborn child an heir or a bastard?"

Love of the artistic does not account for the crookedness of men, though the curve is the only true line of beauty.
