

As Constance Lestrangle and her brother walk on, they pass a number of peasants who are wending their way back to the neighboring farms after the day's marketing. The different styles of caps worn by the women denote that they come from various Brittany villages. As the deep notes of the bells ring forth, bare-headed men and many-capped women bend the knee, and murmur an Ave Maria,