to insect pests is to be ever on the watch. He should not inspect his orchard only once a year, or wait for the inspector to tell him what is wrong, but should be continually on the watch. In this way, he will find out when anything is wrong before much damage has been done. Then, he should call in expert advice. British Columbia fruit growers can seek information from Dr. Fletcher, Dominion Entomologist at Ottawa; Mr. Thos. Cunningham, Inspector of Fruit Pests for British Columbia, or Mr. Anderson, head of the Provincial Department of Agriculture. The third step in dealing with insect pests is to act upon the advice of the expert.

Fruit Inspection

Editor, CANADIAN HORTICULTURIST.—In your editorial column in the May number, under the head of "Fruit Inspection," you stated that during the past winter practically all the inspectors of Ontario were employed within a radius of 15 miles. You infer also that 10,000 barrels of apples west of Toronto still remained with no inspector stationed in that territory, when the temporary inspectors were laid off. Upon these two points permit me to correct
