SELECTIONS FROM LONGFELLOW.

We call the attention of all teachers of English Literature to our new volume of English Literature texts. It is with more than ordinary confidence that we issue this volume. We believe that no other edition of Longfellow will meet the wants of the student as well as this.

The Text.—The text chosen is the best—that of The Riverside Edition, the latest revised by the poet himself. Not only have the poems selected by the University been included in this volume, but many other poems of Longfellow that bear on the selected portions have also been included. This book, therefore, will be as serviceable to the student as if he had a complete Longfellow in his hands.

The Life.—The "Life of Longfellow" has been carefully written with the view of throwing light on the text, and of showing the young student how largely the flavor and color of a poet's work are influenced by the environment of the poet at every stage in his career.

The Notes.—The Notes have been made brief for two reasons: (1) Because Longfellow's style is so clear and transparent that copious annotation is needless. (2) Because in these days most English masters prefer to leave the pupil as much as possible to his own resources in matters of this kind.

The Appendices.—This chapter will be found of very great value. No other edition of Longfellow in the market can compete with ours in the line here worked out. This chapter contains much matter of miscellaneous interest to which the student must have access.

An Examination Desired.—We respectfully ask High School Masters to examine our edition of the Literature for 1890-91 before recommending an edition to their classes. We know what an intelligent verdict must be.
