JOHNSTON'S FLUID BEEF

Running the Gauntlet.

THE SIOUX INDIANS INSULT A NEW MEMBER.

(Denver News.)

The pages of fiction scarcely contain so strange and thrilling a story as that narrated last evening by Sebastian Beck. He is a plain, honest-looking German, probably 50 years of age, and lays a claim to be considerable of a linguist and capable of speaking seven languages in addition to Sioux Indian, which he speaks with great fluency, apparently. During nearly ten years Beck was a member of the Sioux tribe. His story of how he ran the gauntlet is thus told: "We did not know what fate awaited us. But we had scarcely arrived at the Indian camp than we were given to understand that we would have to run the gauntlet. This consisted in running between two lines of braves, five hundred in each line, and

TAKING ALL THE BLOWS that these could give us while we made the run, which was twice up and twice down the line. The lines were just far enough apart to give us room to run, a line of guns being placed along each side, between us and the Indians, which could not be crossed by either us or the Indians. We were compelled to keep within this line, and the Indians were not allowed to leave their positions in the line, but could inflict all the punishment possible while we were within reach of each of them in turn. The Indians were armed with sticks, necessaries, and everything that could be used to strike with of a nature that would inflict pain without doing great bodily injury, but chiefly with a cat-o-nine tails used by the Indians in whipping their ponies. This is a terrible weapon, having a large number of strings, on the end of each of which is a shank of lead. There were a large number of

SO AWAY IN THE LINE in addition to the braves, who appeared to take as strong an interest in the matter as the latter. We were stripped naked with the exception of breech-cloths, which were given us. I was placed first in the line of twenty-five, the run being made by all together in single file. This was a decided advantage to me, as I could go as fast as I liked, not having to depend upon the speed of others. A friendly Indian, the one who had encouraged me at first, signalled me, giving me to understand that I was to run as fast as I could. I did not need the advice after I got well started, but it served me until I got past the first dozen, as I started while they were chatting among themselves. But the rest of the way I got it, I tell you. I just ran for dear life, taking the blows as they came. I could not repress some exclamations of pain as

THE WHIPS CUT INTO MY FLESH, but I managed to keep from disgracing myself in the minds of the Indians, although suffering terribly at every blow received.

"Did many of them miss you?"

"After the first dozen none that I know of. They laid on the blows as hard as they could, but conformed strictly to their law, which is not to leave their place in the line to inflict further punishment."

"When I reached the end of the line the first time I was covered with blood and thoroughly winded, being scarcely able to stand. We managed to get through with our lives, not one of the twenty-one falling or giving up. We were then admitted to membership in the tribe."

Beck is now travelling among the Indians looking for his wife and children, whom he lost when captured years ago.

CONTROL OF FRENCH RAILWAYS.

PARIS, Nov. 5.—The question of the control of railways by the State is again attracting attention. It is contended that the work could be done more effectively and at less expense if placed under the management of a government department than it can be now done with all the expensive machinery of boards of directors and managers with fancy salaries. There is no doubt but that the tariffs, especially for freight, are in many cases excessive. M. Brialon, a member of the Chamber of Deputies, is extreme in his views of State control. He says that the "high charges are killing commerce" and agriculture, whereas even if the State lost 200,000,000, or 300,000,000 a year by lowering the rates, the country would gain ten times that amount by the renewed impetus given to business. "It is," he says, "however, to say that this important question will not be dealt with at present. The country is too near a general election for the Cabinet to adopt such a debatable project."
