

CHAPTER VII.

Non-arrival of reinforcements from Europe, and movements in Lower Province.—General Brock's reception at Queenston.—Nature of the country along the Niagara frontier.—British force along the Niagara frontier at the time of General Brock's return from Detroit.—The force of the American army.—Gen'l Van Ranssalaer's plans.—Despatches of General Brock.—Battle of Queenston Heights.—Despatches from the two commanding officers compared.—Personal appearance of General Brock.—Public opinion of General Brock's character and value.

CHAPTER VIII.

Opinions of the Press respecting General Brock's character and value, continued.—Armistice concluded the day after the battle.—Treatment of the prisoners.—Disposal of the prisoners.—Attempts of the Press to keep up the "war spirit" by misrepresentation.—Refusal of the militia to cross the Niagara river, another proof that the war was not as popular as represented.—Resignation of General Van Ranssalaer, and appointment of Gen'l Smyth.—Destruction of the fortifications at Black Rock, and of the furs taken in the Caledonia.—Capture of Canadian voyageurs.—General Smyth's proclamations.—Invasion of Canada by General Smyth.—Effect of this failure at invasion.—Position of affairs on the Detroit and Lower Canadian frontiers.—Causes of General Dearborn's inaction.

CHAPTER IX.

Causes of General Dearborn's and other failures considered further.—Demonstrations on St. Lawrence.—American force.—Proctor's force.—Sheaffe's force.—Army in Lower Canada.—The total numbers on both sides compared.—Comparative naval strength.—Plan of campaign.—Arrival of Sir James Yeo.—"Hornet" and "Peacock."—The "Chesapeake" and the "Shannon."—Remarks on the action.—Want of discipline on board the "Chesapeake."—Naval events on Canadian lakes.—Expedition to the Miami, and attack on the American defences.—General Proctor deserted by the Indians, and part of the Militia.

CHAPTER X.

Fort Meigs.—Slaughter of captives.—Descent upon York.—Errors of the Commanders.—Descent upon Fort George.

CHAPTER XI.

Expedition against Sackett's Harbour, 27th May.—Proceedings at west end of Lake Ontario; surprise at Stony Creek.—Result of the Dearborn and Chauncey expedition.—Affair at the Beaver Dam.—Capitulation of Col. Boerstler and five hundred and forty-one American troops.—Reinforcements arrive at Queenston, but return to Fort George.—Proceedings in Congress on receipt of news of Boerstler's surrender.—

Col. Clark's expedition against Fort Schlosser.—Col. Bishopp's expedition against Black Rock.—American alliance with Indians.—Proctor, and aspect of affairs in the west.

CHAPTER XII.

Commodore Chauncey's second descent upon York.—Demonstration against the stores at Burlington Heights.—Colonel Scott breaking parole.—Second descent upon York by Chauncey.—Sir James Yeo on Lake Ontario.—Demonstration against Fort George by Sir George Prevost. Cruise of Commodore Rogers; the President and Congress frigates.—Dominica and Decatur, Aug. 5th, 1813.—Pelican and Argus, August 12th.—Boxer and Enterprise, September 5th.

CHAPTER XIII.

Capture of the "Growler" and "Eagle" American sloops.—Descent on posts on Lake Champlain.—Discrepancy between Christie and the letters of Veritas.—Capture of British stores, and affair of boats at Gananoque.

CHAPTER XIV.

Situation of General Proctor in the west.—Consequences of Perry's victory.—Discussion relative to the affair at the Moravian town.

CHAPTER XV.

Retreat of Proctor and place of rendezvous.—Armstrong's observations on Proctor's defeat.—Remarks on Harrison's letters as to numbers.—James' contradictions on this affair.—Character of Tecumseh.—Treatment of prisoners.—Ingersoll on reprisal.—American policy.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Expedition under General Wilkinson.—The numbers engaged at Chrysler's Farm.—General Hampton's movements—his force.—Wilkinson retires to winter quarters.—General order.—Causes of the failure of the expedition. Impression produced on the centre division by the disaster of the right.—Prevost's instructions. Movements of Colonel Murray.—Destruction of Newark, now Niagara.—Movements in the West. Attack on Fort Niagara.

CHAPTER XVII.

Return of killed and wounded in attack on Fort Niagara.—Remarks on Gen. Hull's Letter.—Armstrong on the capture of Fort Niagara.—Proclamation of Sir George Prevost.—Occurrences in Chesapeake Bay, and its tributary rivers.—Descent on Havre de Grace.—Cutting out of the Surveyor Schooner.—Attack on Junon by flotilla.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Failure of attack on Craney Island.—American accounts of the descent on Oswego.—Retreat of the Fleet.—Expeditions against Machilismack-

inac and Match
Prairie du Chien of the Nancy at ings.—Decatur's with the Maced
tempt to blow up
—American bo
sident.—Cruise

Captain Davie patches.—Fifth States' army. or general order Surrender of Fort patch.—Move Gen. Brown's in letter to Chaunce

The battle of
and its results.
rage.—General Drummond.—For despatch.—The Outrage at Port

The fortifica
General Brown's
at Lyon's Creek.
General Izard.
events in that qu

New England
—Capture of W
public buildings.
States Governme
the expedition.