The ball players stuck to their knitting at Norfolk, even if Toronto horses were landing the money at the race track nearby. They won the game in a canter, showing that Joe Kelley was also on the job, and not cashing tickets.

Lacrosse emissaries who have visited Toronto find that the local clubs have lots of players, including several to spare. Their difficulty, however, lies in the fact that the buyers are after the very men the proprietors desire to keep.

The death of Fred Cooper on Tuesday recalls a notable boxing entertainment held in the old Toronto Athlette Club on College street fourteen years ago. The late Mr. Cooper was one of the cleverest of the boys of his day, having draws to his credit with Jack Scholes and Bobby Thompson. His last bout was the semi-wind-up at the show referred to, when he defeated John Nethery in six rounds, The final was between Danny Dougherty and Steve Flanagan, the match having been made by Arthur Irwin, then manager of the Toronto Ball Club. It looked like one of the best mills of the year, but disappointing from a spectator's standpoint. Dougherty was handled by Mike Campbell of Philadelphia, and Flanagan by Jack Delaney of Atlantic City, well known as trainers of boxers. Both boys made the weight, which was 112 pounds. Flanagan boxed on the defensive thruout doing his footwork so persistently that Dougherty was unable to outpoint him, and the result was a draw.
