The word "bargain" has a taint upon it. As too commonly used it suggests musty, stale, shop-worn goods, and what the trade generally calls "seconds." As we use it, the application is to fresh and worthy goods at extremely low prices. This store depends upon quality for reputation, and no matter how great the inducement we'll stick to best goods. The whole case is that our command of the markets is constantly bringing us special lots of goods at special prices, including many of these things for to-morrow :
