High Tides, Ice and Wind Menace The Bay Coast

MILLIONS OF DOLLARS LOSS IN PROSPECT IF JAM BREAKS SUDDENLY

Fifty Feet of Ice Piled on Shore in Some Places—Wharves, Weirs and Navigation Aids Threatened—Blinding Storm Adds to Situation.

Damage to the possible extent of millions of dollars is feared as a result of today's heavy easterly blow combined with the prevailing high tides along the coast and the abnormal quantities of ice which may be broken loose from the shores and started out to sea. Practically all the wharves, and weirs, as well as the Marine and Fisheries departments aids to navigation will be smashed up or carried away if the ice goes out in any quantity.

The ice conditions in this part of the world are worse than they have been for at least thirty years, J. C. Chesley, agent of the Marine and Fisheries department, said this morning. To give some idea of the abnormal quantities of ice, the captain of the Keith Cum told him yesterday that the wharves in Yarmouth Harbor were filled underneath from the bottom of the harbor the whole way back to high tide mark with a solid block of ice. The power which might be exerted if this went out was shown in the fact that the other day the ice rose and lifted the wharf four feet in spite of the fact that there was a complete train of it at the time.

Fifty Feet of Ice.

What may happen to the smaller wharves along the coast, unprotected and unaided, is likely to be far worse. The officials of the department are waiting and fearing at any minute news of disaster which will cost the Government a fortune to repair. Along the coast of Southern New Brunswick and about Yarmouth basin, the small harbors are filled to the mouths with ice and it is piled on the shore, in some cases to the height of forty and fifty feet.

The distance it extends is also in the nature of a record. A lighthouse kept from a point just outside Yarmouth was reported to have said recently that he could not see salt water from his post on account of the unheard-of fields of ice. The captain of a ship coming here from the U. S. recently reported fields of ice fifty miles south of Cape Sable.

Laurentian Forced Back.

St. Andrews harbor and many of the other small harbors along this coast are blocked with solid ice. The Laurentian started for Black's Harbor this morning to make an attempt to break the ice but was forced to turn back by the driving snow. It has been decided by the department to bring the Aberdeen to St. John to undertake some very important work here and this move has caused a considerable amount of protest from Yarmouth, where she has been breaking ice for some months. The ice has been kept piling up in the harbors and bays along the coast by the prevailing northerly and westerly winds but it is feared that this storm will take it out of in an almost solid mass.
