

Loud rage the winds without—the wintry cloud
O'er the cold north star casts her fitting shroud;
And silence, pausing in some snow-clad dale,
Starts as she hears, by fits, the shrieking gale.
Where now, shut out from every still retreat,
Her pine clad summit, and her woodland seat,
Shall Meditation, in her saddest mood,
Retire o'er all her pensive stores to brood?

Putrid sore Throat.—They who attend Children in this dangerous disease, should take care to change their clothes before they enter another house where there are children; there is good reason for believing that persons who have neglected this precaution, have communicated the infection after travelling fifty miles.

Timber for Wharves.—The Charleston Courier suggests to those whose business it is to superintend the repairs of wharves, that Poplar timber resists the attack of the worm in a greater degree than any other description, except the Palmetto. An instance is mentioned of a large log of poplar, which had lain for some years in a salt water mill pond, and was found to have entirely escaped injury from the worm, while other kinds of wood in the same water were entirely destroyed by it.

Recipe for the Stone and Gravel.—Take a large handful of the fibrous roots of garden leeks—put thereto two quarts of soft water; let them be very close covered,—simmer gently over the fire till reduced to one,—then strain it off, and drink a pint in the course of the day, properly divided. This is a sufficient quantity for any adult. Children must be managed according to their age. It must be used for many months to carry off the gravel and dilute the stone,
