Season after season they are asked for by name, and while it is impossible to improve on the quality of the skins, the experience and skill of the makers are reflected in perfection of fit, neatness in stitching, and care of detail; besides our Glove Fitters are experienced-they seem to have the knack of getting the right style for each shape of hand, which means to the wearer real glove comfort.

In the ball-room plak carnations and yellow natcless made a pretty combination of color. Here the Philharmonic orchestra, screened in a bower of palms and ferms, performed a delightful musical programme of 12 dances.

The Prince arrived precisely at 4 o'clock, attended by Captain Aubrey Smith, R. N. It was, distinctly understood that His Royal Highness was not acting in any official capacity and accepted the invitation only as a cadet. He was therefore not received at the entrance door as it is the custom to receive royalty, but passed directly to the drawing room where the Governor and Mrs. McGregor received the guests, assisted by their nieces, the Misses Jean and Sarah McGregor and the Misses McColl of New Glasgow. Mrs. McGregor wore a handsome gown of grey satin and tunic of white chilffon with touches of pale blue.

The wouthful Prince anneared to thortunic of white chiffon with touches of pale blue.

The youthful Prince appeared to thoroughly enjoy himself, and led out a fair partner for every dance. Prince Albert is just a cadet, simple boyish and unaffected; a little shy, perhaps, but has charming manners, and comports himself with modest grace and dignity. On Saturday he entered into the general galety with the care-free spirit of every young cadet present, and partook of tea, ice-oream and cake with keen boyish enjoyment. At 7 o'clock the royal guest took his leave, the orchestre playing the National Anthem as with Captain Smith he entered the carriage in waiting.

Everyone looked extremely well at the dance, the ladies gowns being commented on as exceptionally pretty—light summer fabrics and flowered hats were most generally observed. Mrs. Chrystale poured coffee and Mrs. M. & Chrystale.
