Poetry.

YESTERDAY AND TO-MORROW.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

As the sun now glows on earth,
And the travel behind it glow;
As the flowers now opening to-day,
Sickening they thousand years ago;
So with day mind your duty—
Bringing neither of anxious sorrow;
As the world was yesterday,
So 'twill be to-morrow, love.

What have fancies of our pain,
Since the world first all things saw?
Wisdom's the wisdom to contain,
Mind of man blessing to-day;
Hoped and blessing yet shall we cherish,
As the world went yesterday,
So 'twill go to-morrow, love,
So 'twill go to-morrow.

Life is like the wind that blows
Where the clouds of morn are breaking;
Life is the season that flowers
Something leaving—something taking;
Bright cherish what we may,
Then recall the past—with sorrow;
As the world rolled yesterday,
So 'twill roll to-morrow, love,
So 'twill roll to-morrow.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

CURE OF A DISORDERED LIVER AND BAD DIGESTION.

Copy of a Private Letter from Lt.-Col. Burton, Chester Regiment, dated Liverpool, 23rd June, 1851.

To Professor Holloway.

SIR,—Your Pills and Ointment have saved me a fortune. For many years I was afflicted with a disordered liver and bad digestion. On the first occasion, three doses of your Pills set me right, and on the second attack, a short time ago, I was cured by them after suffering for three months with a violent rheumatic fever, by which I was reduced to try your Pills, and, after persevering for a short time, I was quite restored to health
