ME OWNS UP.

O hapless day! O wretched day.
That ever I should soo!
Alas, the years have sneaked away
And all is changed but me!
Had I the power. I would remand
You to a gloom condign.
But here you've crept upon me and
I—I am thirty-nine!

Now, were I thirty-five, I could Assume a flippant gulse, Or, were I forty years, I should Undoubtedly look wise; For forty years are said to bring Sedateness superfine, But thirty-nine don't mean a thing; A bas with thirty-nine!

You healthy, hulking girls and boys,

What makes you grow so fast?
Oh, I'll survive your lusty noise;
I'm tough and bound to last!
No, no, I'm old and withered, too;
I feel my powers decline;
Yet none believe this can be true
Of one at thirty-nine.

And you, dear girl with velvet eyes,

and you dear my with veryes eyes, I wonder what you mean
Through all our keen anxieties
By keeping sweet sixteen.
With your dear love to warm my heart,
Wretch were I to repine,
I was but jesting at the start,
I'm glad I'm thirty-nine!

So, little children, roar and race
As blithely as you can,
And, sweetheart, let your tender grace
Exait the Day and Man;
For then these factors, I'll engage,
All subtly shall combine
To make both juvenile and sage
The one who's thirty-nine.

Yes, after all, I'm free to say
That I rejoice to be
Standing as I do stand today
Twixt dowl and deep sea;
For though my face be dark with care,
Or with a grimace shine,
Each haply falls unto my share,
Since I am thirty-nine.

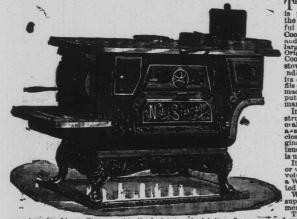

Tis passing meet to make good cheer
And lord it like a king,
Since only once we catch the year
That doesn't mean a thing.
O happy day! O gracious day!
I pledge thee in this wine!
Come, let us journey on our way
A year, good Thirty-nine!
—Eugene Field.

HOW TO TREAT A WATCH. Instructions for Keeping Your Timepiece Always in Good Order.

Having obtained a really serviceable article, you should, in order to produce satisfactory results, follow out these rules: Wind up your watch every day at the same hour. This is generally done at the hour when we retire to rest, or perhaps, better still,
the hour we rise.

generally one at the hour when we retire to rest, or perhaps, better still, the hour we rise.

Avoid putting a watch on a marble slab, or near anything excessively cold. The sudden transition from heat to cold contracting the metal may sometimes cause the mainspring to break. Indeed, the cold coagulates the oil, and the wheel works and pivots working less freely affect the regularity of the timekeeper.

When we lay our watch aside we ought to slope it on a watch case so as to keep it nearly in the same position it has in the pocket. In laying aside your watch be sure that it rests on its case. By suspending it free the action of the balance may cause oscillation, which may considerably interfere with its going.

If you would keep your watch clean you must be quite sure that your case statements.

If you would keep your watch clean you must be quite sure that your case lits firmly, and never put in any pocket but one made of leather. Those pockets which are lined with cloth, cotton or calico give, by the constant friction, a certain quantity of fluff, which enters most watches, even those cases of which shut firmly.

If the watch is not a "keyless" one the key should be small, in order that we may feel the resistance of the stop work: then we can stop in time with-

we may feel the resistance of the stop work; then we can stop in time without forcing anything. It is also necessary that the square of the key should correspond with that of the watch. If it be too large it may in a short time cause the wind up square to suffer from undue wear and tear, the rectifying of which is rather expensive. The hands of an ordinary watch can be turned backward without much risk. It is, however, always better to turn the hands forward to adjust your watch to correct time.

Sol Smith Russell has hit upon a new excuse for declining to employ amateur actors and actresses. While he was playing in a small western town, a few months ago, a stage struck damsel called at his hotel and begged him to engage her as a member of his company. When asked to give an exhibition of her powers as an amateur, she said that she knew nothing that she could recite, but if Mr. Russell would give her anything to study she knew she could act.

"Why do you feel so confident of your acting powers?" dryly asked Sol.

"Because I have genius," instantly replied the young stage struck lady.

"Genius, eh?" remarked Russell. He studied the floor for awhile, and then, quickly looking up at the ambitious little woman, he said, "My dear lady, I would like to aid you in your desire to shine as an actress, but the fact is the interstate commerce law prohibits me from carrying an extra amount of genius, and my company is very nearly overloaded with it now."—New York Star.

A Novelist of the Past.

A correspondent of a New York paper asks where he can obtain George Lippard's works. He has looked far and wide and has failed to find them. And yet only yesterday, so to speak, George Lippard was famous. In the last generation he was one of the most popular American novelists. He wrote book after book, and everybody read them and called for more. Of all the sensational and lurid story writers that this country has produced he was easily the first. His imagination was boundless and riotous. His style was blood cardling.

Lippard leaped into the noonday blaze of notoriety at once, and became as popular in his day as Rider Haggard is in ours. He was no pennyaliner for the aluma, no dime novelist, no hack writer for the blood and thunder weeklies. He was a master of the mysteries of sensational story telling, and he wrote good English. Daniel Webster was certainly a man of good literary judgment. If he could find Lippard's romances fascinating it is fair to suppose they had merit. The great statesman was anenthusiastic admirer of the novelist. He pronounced him a man of genius and predicted enduring fame for his works.

But where are these once popular novels today, and who knows anything about their author? Even in New York, a city full of bookstores.

"Op our know any doctor the result of the will introduce you to my fait, which has become very oppressive." "No." "Then I will give you have any to the emperor's physicians." The traveler went to the prince's house with the note; the answer was not delayed; the next day, tied hands and feet, the and predicted enduring fame for his works.

But where are these once popular novels today, and who knows anything about their author? Even in New York, a city full of bookstores, one has to appeal to the newspapers to answer the question. Just what happened to Lippard will befall many a man who is now working like a slave to win fame and fortune. Today a man's name is ringing through the land; to-morrow it will be remembered by a few, and day after to-morrow men will write to the newspapers asking whether the man really lived or was only a myth. Such is fame in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred. But men will long for it, fight for it and die for it to the end of the world.—Atlanta Constitution.

Good for Potatoes.

"Gosh! but it's hot!" he said, as he backed into a doorway on Woodward avenue to mop his brow.

"Yes, but it is needed," replied the man who was ahead of him by about two minutes.

"Is it? What for!"

"The potato crop."

"Ah! yes. I suppose so."

There was a silence for a minute or two, and then he queried:

"How will it help potatoes?"

"Bake 'em ready for the table, and thus save a heap of fuel and trouble next winter. If you have a few minutes to spare we will figure a little, and I think we can arrive at a pretty close estimate of the fuel. If I remember right, it takes four pounds of coal to bake six potatoes. Emperor William's Brother.
Prince Henry, of Prussia, the kaiser's brother, is the idol of the German anaval service. He is the "Unser Heinrich" of the navy, just as his imperial father used to be the "Unser Heinrich" of the navy, just as his imperial father used to be the "Unser Heinrich" of the navy, just as his imperial father used to be the "Unser Heinrich" of the princession and his physical provess. Once, when the Olga, of which he was then a watch keeping lieutenant, was lying in the Gulf of Kell, the order was given through him for all hands to bathe. The weather was chilly, and an officer remarked to the prince that the water must be far too cold to be pleasant. He suggested therefore that the order should be annulled. Without a word, Prince Henry, who was on the bridge, sprang thence into the sea, swam to the Jacob's ladder astern, climbed on board again, and mounting, dripping, to the bridge, said to the officer, "Do you say so now!" There was no reply, and the prince, instead of going below to change, remained on the bridge in his wet clothes until his watch was relieved. Another story illustrates the prince's activity. One day at Wilhelmshaven he put a thaler between his teeth and dashed up the rigging of his ship, crying, "He who catches me shall have the thaler." Although he was pursued by the whole of the ship company not on duty, he was not eaught, and at last, swinging himself by a rope on deck, he turned to the nearest of his pursuers and said laughingly, "If you are as thirsty as I am you must want it, so here's your money,"—New York Tribune.

Good Housekeeping says that "mud, frequently renewed, is an excellent remedy for the bite of a dog." Huh! A rock two or three inches in diameter applied to the ear of the dog about two seconds before he tries to administer the bite is worth all the mud in the next campaign. One application, if properly made, is sufficient—especially for the dog.—Bob Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

A Deep Artesian Well.

The Pabst Brewing company, of Milwaukee, is boring what is intended to be the largest artesian well in Milwaukee. A beginning has been made by sinking a cistern twenty feet in diameter and twenty feet deep, lined with brick. Below this is a well 200 feet deep and eight in diameter, lined with boiler iron three-eighths of an inch thick. From the bottom of this a shaft is to be sunk to as great a depth as may be necessary to get an ample supply of water for the use of the brewery.—New York Telegram.
