Winter Calf Rearing

To many, winter seems an off season in which to raise calves, but nevertheless it is a fact that most successful calf raisers find it to be the best season. In the first place the farmer has more time to give the proper attention to the details so important in calf feeding; secondly there is usually a greater supply of skim-milk owing to the smaller number of pigs raised in the winter than in summer; lastly the calf has not got the summer heat and flies to contend with and is just at a nice age to turn to pasture the following spring.

When the calf is dropped it should be allowed to remain with its dam until she has licked it clean and dry or else be removed to a separate stall and rubbed dry with wisps of straw or a piece of bagging. If at all possible the winter raised calf should have the brightest, driest and sunniest place in the stable for its winter quarters and they should be kept clean at all times for comfortable quarters mean almost as much as good feeding. The calf should receive within twelve hours, a feed of the colostrum or first milk from its dam. It is important the calf gets a feed of this milk as it has a beneficial effect on the bowels and ensures the calf getting the proper start. For the first few days the cow should be milked and the calf fed three times daily, the milk being fed while still at blood heat. Eight to ten pounds per day should be sufficient for the average calf. Feed the calf whole milk for the first two to four weeks depending on its strength, a weak or puny calf being carried on whole milk for the longest period. Gradually change from milk to skim-milk making the period in which the change is made extend over about ten days as abrupt changes are apt to bring on digestive troubles. At this time the calf should be consuming about twelve pounds of skim-milk daily in two feeds. As the change is made from whole to skim-milk the fat removed from the milk should be replaced by adding a tablespoonful of finely ground scalded flaxseed jelly. The proportion of the flaxseed jelly and skim-milk can be increased gradually and at about three months of age add to the flaxseed jelly other constituents to make a calf meal composed of ground flax, 1 part, fine ground oats 2 parts, and ground corn 3 parts. This mixture to be fed in the milk similarly to the flaxseed jelly at the rate of ½ pound per day at four to five months. At this time the skim-milk ration may be cut off and the dry grain ration mentioned below increased proportionately.

It is well to start the calf eating a little dry and bulky food as early as possible. With this end in view a small quantity of fine clover hay and whole oats should be kept before the calf after it is a month old. As the calf grows older the whole oats may be replaced by a mixture of bran, rolled oats, and ground corn. This mixture should be fed at noon at the rate of ½ pound per day at start up to 1½ pounds per day at time of reducing skim-milk and calf meal mixture at which time the dry grain mixture may well be increased to 3 pounds per day and be fed in two feeds, morning and evening. Roots are a valuable feed for growing calves and may be introduced into the ration in small quantities when the calves are from two to three months of age. Silage should not be fed to very young calves and as it usually gets strong towards the latter part of the winter, only very small quantities should be fed if used at all. Feed salt in limited quantities regularly. Provide fresh water but do not let the calves gorge themselves with it.

Strict attention should be paid to the cleanliness of the utensils and mangers in which calves are fed as well as to the box stalls in which they are quartered. The latter should be cleaned out at least once a week and preferably oftener.

The above ration may seem heavy and the feeding of it a matter of some detail, but it is attention to these points that ensures well grown calves capable of developing into profitable mature animals.

Liberal Support of Lloyd George

LONDON, Oct. 7.—The first number of the new Lloyd George Liberal magazine which is to be issued monthly with the object of supporting the government policy, appears today. It contains a special interview with the Premier devoted to the defence of the coalition government. Incidentally, Lloyd George expresses the belief that the United States will formally join the League of Nations after the presidential election and asserts that when Germany also enters, which will be as soon as she gives proof of her good faith, the League will become an effective instrument instead of, as now, a mere league of the Allies. Discussing Ireland, the Premier refuses to believe that the supporters of

Mr. Asquith have the smallest assurance that they could carry dominion home rule, even if they had a majority in the House of Commons. He argues that quite apart from the difficulty concerning the army and navy, the British people did not like to consent to a measure giving Ireland control of her own taxation, because that would almost certainly result in Ireland evading the taxation necessary to provide for obligations of the national war debt.

The Premier, however, admits that if some one entitled to speak for Ireland and whose word could be trusted would undertake the necessary guarantees in this respect it would be a different matter.
