The Cost of Waging War.

It is certain that the present great war will place all other wars whatsoever well in the shade as regards expense, this having been estimated at tweive millions sterling per day, whereas the costliest war on record hitherto—that between Italy and Austria in 1866-only cost £10,000.-

the war only lasted twenty days, or at day. Our last war in South Africa. cost us approximately £195,000 per day, and, excluding the present war, Great Britain has spent a trifle of £227,000,000 on war in the short interval since 1895. Russia, however, piness which he deserves. in the sixty years that began with the Crimean War and ended with the Sulphate of Ammonia war against Japan, spent £335,000,

000 sterling on fighting, and lost 664,000 soldiers' and sailors' lives in

In recent times our most expensive war-excluding that in South Africa was the comparatively small affair for the stamping out of the Boxer Rebellion in China, in 1900-1, for the public purse had to be drawn on to the tune of £5,827,800; and in contrast to this it is interesting to note that our campaign against the Zakka Khels eight years ago, only cost the Indian Government £57,000. This appears the merest fleablte compared with the total cost of the great American Civil War, which has been estimated at two thousand millions
