Mr. John Ball, an old and esteemed citizen, died suddenly Sunday afternoon, at the family residence, No. 164 Adelaide street. Mr. Ball, who was a native, of Bristol, Eng., came to this country 55 years ago. About 25 years ago Mr. John Ball removed to London, where he followed his trade as a carpenter, and had resided here ever since, being in his 71st year when he died. Deceased was an adherent of the Anglican denomination, and was a highly-esteemed citizen, having filled the offices of magistrate and captain of militia, in the township of Hamilton, Northumberland county. Boyd, of Queen's Avenue Church, has been apparent during the last few days, and that there is a prospect, with absolute quiet and rest from all church anxiety and work, he will before long be enabled to resume the work he has been compelled to lay aside for the past three weeks through weakness; indeed, in all probability by giving himself up too zealouely to his labors, without a single selfish thought of how he might be impairing his physical strength thereby. On Saturday last the officials of the church held a non-official meeting, when strong sympathy was expressed for Mr. Boyd. As, according to the opinion of his attending physician, entire rest and freedom from all church work was highly desirable at the present juncture, the officiary unanimously tresolved that a supply be furnished Rev. Mr. Boyd for the next three months, in order to facilitate his restoration and to enable him, at the earliest period after such restoration, to resume his ministerial and pastoral labors. The board, it is understood, very generously provides for the expense involved, and has made arrangements for the procuring of the supply forthwith.

An electric road is now building to run between Chicago and St. Louis, and a speed of 100 miles per hour is guaranteed, and it is believed a higher speed will be attained. Should this prove a success, the doom of passenger cars drawn by steam locomotives will be saled, for surely passengers, say, for instance, from New York to Chicago, will not be content to make the journey in 24 hours, when it can safely be made in from six to eight hours. I could write sufficient to fill a page of your paper with good reasons why an exclusive electric franchise ought not to be given any company, but I think I have written sufficient to convince any intelligent person.

Herman Zigler, a German living with his wile and three children at the residence of his wife's parents, Henry and Caroline Siles, shot his father-in-law and mother-in-law, instantly killing both. His next victim was his wife, but she was only slightly wounded.

Before the police were able to disarm and arrest Zigler a number of shots were exchanged and he was wounded in the right side by a bullet from a policeman's revolver. Zigler occupied the lower floor of the house, while his wife's parents lived on the floor above.

Mrs. Zigler, the wife, says: "There was nothing to indicate that there was anything wrong with the mind of my husband. Later in the day after he had got the gun I heard my little boy crying, but before I could get there my mother reached him and was shot. Then I was shot myself, and ran for the children and took them away. That's all I know about it."

Late to-night Zigler talked of the shooting. "I only did what the spirits told me, and when I get out of here there is going to be another great big fight."

Mr. Chapleau's acceptance of the governorship is taken in political circles as an indication that Sir John Abbott will retain the Premiership, and that Sir John Thompson will become chief justice.
