UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE WAVING

By HOWARD R. GARIS. Merry were the little bunnies in Uncle Wiggily's hollow stump bungalow. They hopped about, they frisked about, they leaped about—Jingle and Jangle, Tooter and Scooter, Baby Bunty and all the others. For it was still the season of the Christmas holiday and there was no school. Uncle Wiggily sat in his easy chair, looking from the window now and then to watch the wind blow the snow in swirling clouds across the fields, and he listened to the jolly shouts and laughter of the little rabbits.

Uncle Wiggily did not know much about the hats of animal ladies. So he just said "Um!" and "Ah," and "Um," again. Nurse Jane thought this a very wise remark, and she went on: "You see the moths have eaten all the feathers off my hat and it isn't fit to wear! Oh, what shall I do?"
"Get another hat I should say," an-"Get another hat, I should say," answered Uncle Wiggily, philosophical
