A resolution to this effect was moved by Dr. Milne, the amount of the purchase money to be $24,000. Messrs. Brydon-Jack and McLean did not consider the arrangement altogether satisfactory, and as bondsmen altogether satisfactory, and as bondsmen asked to what the amount realized by the sale was to be devoted. It was explained that some ten or eleven thousand dollars would go to clear off interest on the church world go to clear of interest on the church mortgage (which at present amounts to $42,000), and the rest would go to reduce the debt. After a good deal of discussion the motion carried, the managers undertaking to report again.

Lichtenberg last June, and within a short time after Daniels' divorced wife married a man named Lamont in Victoria. Daniels, not to be behind, married the woman who now goes as Mrs. Lizzie Daniels. Since the last two marriages, Daniels has visited his divorced wife, known as Mrs. Lamont, by permission of the court, to see his children. In the face of the mixture of matrimonial relations, Daniels was called as a witness and objected to as being the husas a witness and objected to as being the hus-band of Mrs. Daniels. The justice held that, as he was legally divorced from his first wife, Mrs. Lamont, and had married the woman known as Mrs. Daniels before The annual Christmas tree and entertainment in connection with the Protestant Orphans' Home was held last evening in the large dining room of the old building on Rae street—the last event of the kind likely to be held there, as by the time the heliday season comes round once more the new Home will probably be in use.

As on previous occasions, for many years, the chair was occupied by Rt. Rev. Bishop Cridge of the Referenced Friencesh about the woman known as Mrs. Daniels before the expiration of the six months limitation, he was not the husband of either, and could testify. In the same connection he held that the marriage of Daniels' divorced wife to Lamont in Victoria, being within the six months' limitation, was also null and void. On this point the Justice held that the contracting parties did not avoid the laws of Washington by going to Victoria. Summing the matter up, there appears to have been one legal marriage, one legal divorce, one illegal marriage in one legal divorce, one illegal marriage in Seattle and one in Victoria.

DIVORCE SUIT.

Pelgram, for alienating the affections of her husband. Annie Amelia he was guided by the practical opinion of the sewerage engineer. Hall, a handsome girl of 30 odd years, was living in the town of Magog, Quebec, two and a half years ago. Her cousin, Charles Rogers Pelgram, whose father had been a member of the firm of Pelgram & Co., silk manufacturers, of Paterson, N. J., and died seven years ago, leaving $1,000,000, came from Paterson, accompanied by his mother, to visit her father, Judge John H. Hall, then magistrate of the district.

Charles was not 19 years old, but he fell in leave with his approval.

He was guided by the practical opinion of the sewerage engineer.

Ald. Styles did not approve of the by, law as outlined. A more scientific principle, such as that adopted in thelold country, would meet with his approval.

Ald. Munn predicted that there would be a larger amount of sewerage than the public would care to pay for. A scientific friend had suggested that in the case of a sewerage reservoir, the contents might be emptied, as experience had suggested, into deep water. Hannah Smith

The suit for divorce against the husband In responding to the thanks of the Board conveyed through Mr. Worlock, the chairman recalled the occasion some twenty years ago, when the proposition had first been made to establish the Home and after very little talk, it was done. Since then it had grown and prospeted, and in course of another year would get another advance when the new building would be in use.

The entertainment was brought to a close by the singing of another carol, the dore clogy and the pronouncing of the benediction by the Bishop. The ladies of the institution, during the evening, served light refreshment. Everyone had a jolly time, and many little hearts are cheered and made happy by the effort put forward by
