

STRAYED BABY.

Our picture shows a tiny little girl who wandered away from her home and got lost. The poor little thing was very much frightened and so began to cry. She is a dear little child with bright golden hair and blue eyes, and in spite of her ragged old clothes and dirty face is sweet and lovable. Her mother is very poor and has to work hard to earn a living for herself and little ones. For that reason she has not time to keep the children clean and tidy, nor can she devote much time to looking after them.

Should not all little children who have nice homes and kind friends to care for them, be very thankful, and pray the good God to watch over the poor washer-woman's children?

Said a mother to a little girl, who evidently objected to seeing another child petted: "Why, Susie, I believe that you're jealous!" "No, mamma," she replied; "I'm not jealous, but I don't feel com'fable."