My dear Principal Currie:

I received your message this morning regarding Professor Hurd. I have known him very intimately for fourteen years past—since my first year at Princeton, which was his last year as graduate student. I think he is a first-class man, especially fitted by reading and study for a chair in moral philosophy. He is a thorough scholar, with an unusually wide range of reading, not only in philosophy but in general literature, much interested in poetry and music—distinctly a man of "liberal culture." He is rather slow to express positive opinions, though seriously
