OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

TIMES.—"This captivating book."

MORNING POST.—". . . the fine appreciations of Lord Randolph Churchill, of Haydon the painter, and of Oscar Wilde. They are all three brilliant, eloquent, and sympathetic."

DAILY NEWS.—"Once more we welcome a volume of essays, not topical in the narrow sense, but always apposite and actual. We welcome, too, the work of a writer who has a scholarly sense for words, and allows himself—and us—the luxury of a literary conscience."

EVENING STANDARD.—"Altogether charming; we should have to mention some great names to get a comparison with it."

GLOBE.—"Mr. Street has something to say that is worth saying and worth reading."

OBSERVER.—"There is such charm, so fine a substratum of humour and fancy, rippling through these little pieces."

OUTLOOK.—"Where all are praiseworthy, it is difficult to discriminate."

NATION.—"The present volume gives proof that he has been nourished in the best traditions of the English Essay."

WORLD.—"Mr. Street has had the artistic restraint to give us only his best, with the result that every essay is of the same excellence."

BYSTANDER (MR. ROBERT ROSS).—"We are fascinated by Mr. Street's inimitable style."

GRAPHIC (MR. THOMAS SECCOMBE).—"I know of no finer literary bouquet attainable at the present day than that which may be disengaged from these select papers."

ENGLISH REVIEW.—"Of a quality only too rare in these days of commercial writing."
