Bruce Goodfellow, president of the company, says the failure came at a time when careful management and Fancy Towel Rings, in oak and the gradual revival of business were commencing to hold out encourgement for the future. One big creditor, the largest of all, had forced matters by demanding to be secured in preference to other creditors.

They said: "The company thought, under the circumstances, was better to have a receiver appointed for the protection of all creditors. While no inventory has been taken as yet, it is believed the assets will exceed the liabilities. The business will undoubtedly continue. We look for a favorable outcome of the affair."
