

THE MAN KILLS BIG FELLOW

Italians in a Deadly Midnight
Quarrel on a Quiet
Brooklyn Street.

Baldwin, L. I., June 27.—That a will of an Italian half an hour after midnight in a duel that was fought in front of the brown-stone houses of Harrison street, near Henry, in Brooklyn. All the odds were in favor of one man. He was six feet tall and strong enough to twist the other man's neck in his hand. He had a 38-caliber revolver and time to fire three shots from it to the other man's one. He was the man that died.

The body is believed to be that of Antonio Devel Camardo, of 149 Columbia street. The police assert that they know the little man, but they refuse to give out his name till they capture him or at least get close to his trail.

Many good citizens in the neighborhood were fast asleep, when four pistol shots broke the quiet. The explosions followed fast, like firecrackers on a string. After the last one came an instant's hush, the pause of a held breath, then, like echoes of the shots, the click-click of boot-heels on the pavement.

A hundred heads—gray, brown, night-capped or bald—popped out from windows. The first ones to see their heads out of the window had caught a glimpse of a short man turning the corner of Henry street.

Most of the spectators went back to sleep if they could. A few dressed hastily and ran out to see if any tangible evidence remained. They found six feet of Italy stretched on the sidewalk, a big gun held tight in one hand. The man was yet breathing, but he had ceased before the surgeon arrived from the hospital.

Three cartridges in the dead man's gun were empty. The useless bullets had been lost in the shadows. Forty feet away was a little 22-caliber pistol with one empty shell in its chamber. Its bullet had passed through the left arm and found the big man's heart.

In the pockets of the victim were found a bank book and papers, all bearing the name Camardo. A silver watch, $15 in cash, and a few trinkets made up the tale.

There is a Camardo, a "longshoreman," about 35 years old. He has been near the water front in company with a man whose head scarcely reached his shoulder. This is the man the police are hunting for. The two were known to have quarreled.

DISASTROUS FLIRTATION

Broke Up Two Wealthy Homes and Caused One Suicide.

Cleveland, Ohio, June 27.—A street car flirtation caused the destruction of two homes, the suicide of a disgraced husband, a continual chase by the frate wife and proceedings for divorce, according to the story told Judge Kennedy in common pleas court today by the wife of Wm. E. Clark, son of the late James H. Clark, one of the founders of the Standard Oil Company.

The suit of divorce involves a fight over the many thousands of dollars that Clark will inherit from the estate of his father.

Mrs. Mary A. Clark said she and her husband lived happily on Cedar avenue, Southeast, until he met Mrs. Nettie Diglow.

"He sold his Standard Oil stock for $30,000, and took Mrs. Diglow to Bakerville, Cal.," she testified. "I followed three years ago, and found them living there in fine style with three servants. My husband had bought the woman $10,000 worth of diamonds. I attached those."

Dr. John C. Hallock testified that Clark told him eleven years ago of a beautiful woman he had met on a street car. He was enraptured over her. When she was ill he sent the doctor to treat her.

"I tried to break up the love affair," said the doctor. "Clark acknowledged he had done wrong, and said he would never see Mrs. Diglow again, but his promise did not last long."

"Shortly after I treated her, her husband committed suicide. Additional testimony will be heard Tuesday. Clark did not appear in court, but may send depositions from California."

SPARES NEGRO'S NECK

Judge on His Own Responsibility Commutes Friendless Man's Sentence.

Kansas City, June 27.—Judge Wolford today saved the life of a negro who had been convicted of murder and appeared to receive a death sentence.

"The negro was Wallace Cooper. He stood up, unintelligent and poorly dressed, and his black face looked troubled as he faced the judge."

"How old are you?" asked Judge Wolford.

"Twenty years."

"Well," said the judge, "you're guilty of murder all right, but you're a poor, ignorant black man and I don't want to hang you. You have no friends. You have no one to plead that you were insane when you killed this man. If I sentence you to hang you will hang just as sure as there's a God in heaven."

"There will not be a whole lot of women circulating petitions to save your neck. There will not be a lot of fool men writing letters to the governor to save you. No, one will send you money. You'll just be forgotten with the day set for your hanging, and then they'll hang you. I'll sentence you to 30 years in the penitentiary."

Cooper killed James Taylor, another negro, in a livery stable in the West Bottoms. Taylor had killed two men in his career and was known as a bad negro.

LURKS IN WOODS; ROOSTS IN TREES

Long Island Villagers Thrown in Panic by Antics of a Wild Man.

New York, June 27.—A little gnome man lurks in the woods hard by this village, there can now be no possible doubt. Constable Stephen Pettit led a posse into the haunts of the creature, but was able to find only a few deserted nests in the trees where the unwelcome visitor had lodged. Residents are in a state bordering on terror. They bar and bolt their doors at night, and two or three of the inhabitants have set spring guns on their front porches.

Because the creature has been seen perched like a wild turkey on the roof of a house, the story has gained circulation that he has wings. Miss Sempron Jenkins, principal of the Freeport high school, has called him Dracula, after the principal character in Bram Stoker's novel, and that watchdog of all Nassau is "Dracula, alive or dead."

Dracula has been wandering near the pumping station, which is used to supply a portion of Brooklyn. He has also appeared at dawn to Mr. Simpkin, who was gathering the products of his Plymouth Rocks. The wild man seized the rubber dating stamp, with which Mr. Simpkin was about to imprint an egg, and with a fiendish cry tore across the railroad track and disappeared in a clump of blackberry bushes.

Young persons who are accustomed to visit the kissing bridge at twilight now shun it, for the unpleasant experience of a Freeport couple there has alarmed the community. They were leaning against the rail, when the wild man approached and laid a heavy hand on the youth's shoulder, and then laughing in his face suddenly disappeared. It is believed he swung himself in the branches of a weeping willow which was on the overhanging bank of the stream.

Miss Conway, who lives in Oakview avenue, outside of the main portion of this village, declares that last Monday afternoon she saw a tall man emerge from the woods. His clothing, which was torn and tattered, was black. His hair was intensely black, and he also wore a black mustache. His eyes had a wild and restless expression, and she noticed also that his feet, which were incased in patent leather shoes, seemed small, and that he apparently had little or no toes. The wild man looked about him in every direction, and, catching sight of an automobile, gave vent to ribald laughter and receded into the underbrush.

Wild men have been seen from time to time in this vicinity, for several sanatoriums for the weak-minded are within a radius of ten miles, but this is the first one who goes to roost. He has been in the habit of sleeping, as in evidence.

Unless Dracula is treed by the end of this week, preparations will be made for a man hunt on Sunday. The wild man will be filled with determined sportsmen.

DROPPED DEAD

Worry Over Civic Investigation May Have Caused This Death.

Toronto, June 26.—Mr. Quarles Donald McCulloch, secretary of Bennett & Wright, Limited, dropped dead in the garden of his home, 623 Ontario street, this morning, heart failure being the cause. Dr. W. H. Alexander, Carlton street, who had been attending him for the last few days, was called in Saturday, but Mr. McCulloch was beyond help.

It is believed that the civic investigation had a good deal to do in hastening his end, as he was worrying a lot about it, especially in view of the absence of Clarke, the firm's bookkeeper, who was required as a witness.

Mr. McCulloch was at work yesterday and apparently was quite well. This morning, too, there was no intimation in any way of death being so close at hand. He had partaken of breakfast and had just stepped out into the garden when he fell to the ground dead. Mr. McCulloch would have been 50 years old next September, and had been with the Bennett & Wright firm for 20 years or more. He was an expert and enthusiastic curler and bowler, a member of the Prospect Club, and was on the committee which is arranging for the tour of the British bowlers. He was a Mason and a Canadian Fencer. In religion he was a member of St. Simon's Church.

widow, two sons and a daughter survive him.

SUMMER DRESS AFIRE

Little Ottawa Girl Has Narrow Escape from Burning to Death.

Ottawa, June 26.—Little Marguerite Keyes, a three-year-old child, sustained a burning accident at the corner of Waverly and Elgin streets. She was standing there with her father when some careless smoker threw away a match which had not been extinguished.

The match caught the little one's summer dress and a quick flame leaped over her. Her father seized her and, dragging the child, stayed some of the flames while he grasped her burning hair with his hands. This saved a serious situation.

The child's dress and two under-skirts were burned up, the silk bonnet strings went, and one-half of her hair was gone and her eyebrows only thick flannel underclothing saved serious body injuries. It was a very narrow escape for the child.

There is an increasing tendency on the part of large consumers of water in London to draw on the water reservoirs in the lower geological strata beneath the capital rather than to be indebted to companies for their water supply. The latest institution to show its independence in this fashion is Clemons' Inn, where, not 20 yards from the Strand, an artisan well has just been tapped, after three months' boring, at a depth of 450 feet.

A CRYING EVIL, THE WORLD OVER

Divorce Reform is a Burning Question on Both Sides of the Atlantic.

London, June 27.—It is a singular coincidence that almost simultaneously in America and England the question of divorce reform should have been raised by legal pronouncements. There is this striking difference, however: In America the proposed reform takes the direction of making divorces more difficult to obtain. In England it is proposed to make them easier of attainment. But the chorus of approvals which have greeted the suggestions of Sir Gorell Barnes, president of the divorce court, indicate that there is a general recognition of the desirability of making some changes in the present English law, which Sir Gorell stigmatizes as "full of inconsistencies, anomalies and inequalities amounting almost to absurdities." The Divorce Law Reform Association has since been formed to give effect to his recommendations.

Sir Gorell is in favor of abolishing the present practice of granting permanent separations between husband and wife, without freedom to contract another marriage, and substituting divorce thereof whenever the evidence justifies it. At present permanent separations, but not divorce, are allowed for persistent cruelty, wilful neglect to reasonably maintain a wife and her infant children, and misconduct not combined with cruelty.

The latter proviso reveals one of the most glaring anomalies of the English law. While infidelity alone is held to be sufficient ground for granting a husband a divorce from an unfaithful wife, a wife cannot obtain a divorce of the marital ties for misconduct unless the offense is accompanied by cruelty. Gladstone fought strenuously for a clause to be inserted in the bill of 1857 giving a wife the same facilities for divorce as a husband, but he could not carry it.

Sir Gorell holds that the same grounds for dissolution of marriage should apply to both, and that particular misconduct by the husband should be sufficient ground for divorce as it is now in the case of a wife. That is the law in Scotland and in nearly every other civilized country in the world. In fact, that is the aim of the divorce law reformers, to make divorce just rather than easy—though in making it just it must of necessity be made easier than now.

Thomas Paynter Allen, secretary of the Marriage Law Reform Association holds the view that the stringency of the English divorce law is more productive of immorality than are the lax American laws.

A strong ground of complaint against the English law is the excessive cost of obtaining a divorce. It averages little short of $1,000. The result is that very few of the members of the community obtain divorce—not because they do not need or deserve the relief that the court affords, but because they cannot pay court costs. This state of affairs operates as a direct incentive to immorality.

There is a widespread feeling that insanity should be included among the grounds for divorce. At present a man or woman may be tied to a lunatic for a lifetime. The Earl of Durham's wife developed insanity soon after his marriage and has been a hopeless maniac for the last 25 years. Under the English law he can obtain no relief. It has ruined him to a lonely and loveless life.

IF THE KING COMES.

London, June 26.—Writing from Ottawa, E. Farrer, in a letter to the Tribune on "Education in Canada," being mostly historical, upholds Sir Wilfrid Laurier in regard to the Northwest schools, and adds that our experience in Canada teaches no finer lesson than the constitutional compromises between Protestants and Catholics.

The American idea is to train children as Americans rather than as members of this or that denomination. In Canada there are real Protestants and Catholics rather than Canadians. The constitution prevents any change.

The Standard comments on eagerness with which the Canadians are discussing the possible visit of the King. If he accepts the invitation, the progression procession for which history can furnish no parallel.
