I OWE MY LIFE TO A. I. C.

It Did Me More Good than all Other Treatment Combined.

Bay Roberts, May 23rd, 1914.
I really believe I owe my life to A. I. C. Ever since childhood I have been suffering with a tightness on the chest, shortness of breath and a weak heart. I was so tired and worn out that people on the street often asked me if I thought I could get along without help. Some time ago I got a pint bottle of A. I. C., and now I am completely cured. Today I am feeling fine, and everyone praising me on the street. I really believe I owe my life to A. I. C. and it has perfectly cured me. You can publish my name, and say one not believing this statement, can write or see me personally.

Shall We Be Laggards?

(B. C. Province.)

The story of the survivors of the Newfoundland disaster is an epic of the toilers of the sea which reminds the reader of Captain Scott's struggle back from the South Pole. There, off the Island of Fogo, about 160 miles north west of St. John's, was the great game played out once more. The same elements which destroyed Captain Scott destroyed over fifty of such men as he would have loved. As he and his four comrades stood by each other to the end, so over 100 of these Newfoundland fishermen stood together, fighting for each other the last grim battle with death. Captain Scott had to go eleven more miles to reach his next depot. These fishermen had to go ten miles to reach their ship. They faced the storm and a peril they knew full well and staked their lives against nature. Nature fought for her prey and grasped them one by one. A few hours more and none would have lived to tell the tale. Those who survived came out of the jaws of hell and only one of all that gallant company seems to have come through unscathed.

It is possible now to picture that last march. Apparently about 170 men left the herd of seals to make their way to the Newfoundland, which was ten miles away. The other men working on the same pan were nearer their ships when the storm broke and reached safety. Out of the 170 about fifty of the Newfoundland's crew found their ship after battling their way through the storm. The rest lost their way. Night came down and the storm grew worse. Snow and a freezing wind lashed their bodies, open water spaces between the ice floes trapped their feet. They had no food, and shelter there was none on that stricken icefield. For the next thirty six hours they struggled to keep moving was their only chance and the stronger helped the weaker. They stood by each other to the end. While life flickered in the body of their own vitality. When it died, they turned to help others who have never fought such fights, true realization of that march is impossible. Dearly we may imagine the terrors of that struggle, but physically we can not understand its horror, any more than most of us could even attempt it. At first to those men it was a commonplace of their existence. At last it was only one more tragedy of their calling. Scores of them have died singly or in twos or threes under similar circumstances before—this time death took them wholesale. Yet not one flinched. Whatever they felt they kept to themselves. They chafed each other on and even when sanity forsok some, the others would not let them fall out and die. If the strongest had held together and let the weaker die they might have saved themselves much agony. But that is not the way of these Newfoundland fishermen. They share their good luck and bad together—always together.

It is a magnificent story of heroism of which we may well be proud. It is a fine thing to know that there are men left in the world who can live and die like this. Civilization as we know it is a poor thing compared to the primitive way of life as led by such men. Madness struck many of them, but never panic. Exhausted, tortured almost beyond human endurance, they fought on not for their own lives but each for his comrades. Who can tell of the simple heroism of those men struggling on hour after hour, when to lie down and die was after all the easiest way out. It needed real courage to keep on and by so doing help others to do the same thing. Face to face with death may make life seem a precious thing and well worth a great struggle, but these men fought not only for their own lives but the lives of their comrades.

And thus out of the gloom caused by this disaster there breaks the glory of self sacrifice. What those men did for their comrades surely we, who live in security and comparative ease, can do for the women and children who have suffered such grievous loss. These simple fishermen were ready to give their lives—may save of their own vitality and health to succor their comrades. We are asked to give material help which at most means perhaps some small sacrifice on our part. Shall we be laggards with such an example before us?

The subject at the Adventist Church Sunday night will be 'Do you know God?'

The Church Fallen and Restored

A very interesting though necessarily brief outline of the history of the Church was given by Elder Young last Sunday night, which he endeavored to prove that the mere banishing by any denomination of its antiquity was by no means evidence that it is the true Church. He maintained that those who proclaim and practice the great truths sustained by the Apostles constitute the Church of Jesus Christ—This, the speaker said, agrees with John 16:14. Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you.

Accordingly, Elder Young laid down some of the plain doctrines of the Bible fundamental to true religion, such as The Mediation of Justification by Faith, State of the Dead, the Sabbath, etc., and showed by the citation of many texts that these were held by the Apostolic Church.

That the Church was early on concentered with men speaking reverent things, substituting truth with error, was proven from Acts 20: 29, 30; 2 Thess. 5: 3-7, the latter being a prophecy of a falling away from the standard set by Christ and the Apostles.

Mr. Young showed how fully this prophecy was fulfilled in the history of the Church as evidenced by the most eminent and reliable of church historians. It was during this spiritual decadence that one after another of the doctrines of Holy Writ became the object of Satan's attack until all were trampled under foot and supplanted by traditions of human invention. This, said Mr. Young, was what necessitated the Reformation. Men with hearts fired with zeal and devotion determined to restore to the world that imperishable treasure, the Bible. With the restoration and study of the Bible, truths long buried were again unearched and the children of God began again to trace the old paths of the Apostles and prophets.

That the Reformation was not completed in the 16th century was very evident from the speaker's remarks. He honored the work of the Wesleyes and others of recent years whose fidelity to God made them the target for insult and abuse. Mr. Young said that a message of reform is due this generation which will embrace and declare all the truths of the Apostolic Church, not excepting the Sabbath of the 4th commandment.

The Adventists profess to have this reform message which proclaims a restitution of all things spoken by the Holy Prophets, and maintain that when it is given to the world Christ will come, Acts 3: 19-21. That they have advanced light on the Bible cannot well be denied, and that there is an investigation on the part of the people is evidenced by these services.

Mr. Jas. S. Boyes, representing the Simonds Canada Saw Co. Ltd., was in town on Thursday.

Monday next will be observed as Empire Day, and special excursion trains will run between St. John's and Carboneau. Return tickets one way first class fare will be issued, good from May 28th to May 30th.
