PHARAOH'S LAND

Egypt has just entered a new phase of its long history. By the Anglo-French settlement the last French pretension over Egypt has been extinguished. Great Britain has now a free hand in the land of the buried Pharaohs, the eternal pyramids and the silent sphinzes. This means to Egypt property, and to British interests security.

There never was a country that occupied such an extraordinary position as Egypt has done for years. Its complications are almost bewildering. The country is a vassal State of the Sultan of Turkey. Its obligation to Turkey consists of an annual payment of about $3,500,000. The Khedive of Egypt is hemmed in as is no other sovereign in the world. He cannot negotiate a loan without the consent of Turkey. He cannot negotiate a treaty that conficts with Turkish interests. He is not allowed to build an ironclad, and his army is restricted to 18,000 in thmse of peace. His Majesty has a distinguished visitor, the British Agent, whose advice he must follow in all public matters. Lord Cromer sits at the right hand of the Khedive and tells him what to do. Failure to shey would mean prompt dethronement. Up till a few days ago Great Britain could not add a new charge to the revenues without the consent of France. Thus the nominal ruler of Egypt is a nominal vassal of a sovereign, while Great Britain is the practical administrator of the country.

All this has come about in a gradual and natural manner. With the story of the financial embarrassment of Egypt the world is quite familiar. There had been a carnival of extravagence under Ismail Pasha. In twelve or thirteen years a debt of $16,000,000,000. Much of the money had been recklessly squandered. A great deal of it had never found its way into the public treasury. Enormous rates recklessly squandered. A great deal of it had never found its way into of it had never found its way into the public treasury. Enormous rates of interest were paid. The burden was greater than the country could bear. Interest on the bonds was not paid.

England and France were appoint-was greater than the country could bear. Interest on the bonds was not paid.

England and France were appointed receivers for the bankrupt country. They sent representatives, who endeavored to restore order in the financial chaos. But their work was not appreciated by the Egyptians. A rebellion was started by Arabi Pasha. When hostilities began France declined to take up arms and fight for the dual control. England then told France to stand aside while it cleared the decks for action. The bombardment of Alexandria and the capture of Tel-el-Kebir decided for British supremacy. After the rebellion was over the dual control was at an end, and England did not ask France to resume the position it had voluntarily surrendered.

France still retained, however, a financial veto. Any new expenditure, such as the construction of a new canal, or an extension of the system of irrigation, must have the approval of France before it can be made a charge upon the revenues. This has proven the chief embarrassment of the British control. It took three years to get the consent of France to the abolition of forced labor by the Egyptian peasants on public works. An ancient law entitled the Khedive to compel the fellah to work on any public undertaking. This was nothing less than alevery. To abolish the system and substitute free labor meant an outlay of $2,000,000 a year. But England insisted, and after much delay France consented. At every opportunity France has insisted upon the British evacuation of Egypti. It has been drilled into the Egyptians that if they were free France would be their all-sufficient ally. And the French people have been taught to believe that Egypt with its storied wealth has been fliched from them by "Perfidious Albion." So Egypt has been a lasting grievance. Yet Great Britain shows no disposition to release her grip. When the country first passed under British control only a temporary occupation was contemplated. But responsibilities have grown up. glad vou catch a little cold to-day, by owes sorrow it has reached the throat, lay the lungs are affected, and pecial to the house of the lay you had used "Catarrhoearliest of lich kills colds in five minimal to the first place Catarrhowhe have other the irritated membranes store in the sevent ongestion,—then it cut's phlegm and destroys the exactly the enables the blood to represent the conference of the local translation of the local transl

Yet Great Britain shows no disposition to release her grip. When the country first passed under British control only a temporary occupation was contemplated. But responsibilities have grown up.

All the world concedes that British rule has worked wonders for Egypt. It has, in the first place, restored national credit. Egypt is no longer a defaulter. Its obligations are regularly met, and its Government possesses ample funds. Another effect of British rule has been the suppression of a very large extent of official corruption. Under previous regimes nothing was done without a bribe. Justice was baght and sold. Criminals purchased their acquittal. Government officials levied blackmail on merchants. Corruption was rampant. In twenty years Lord Cromer has given Egypt a coadition of administration. Worthy of any European State, and superior to that of many. This has not been accomplished without great firmness and splendid executive ability. The master British Agent has had to compel the Khedive in spite of himself to dismiss unworthy Ministers. He has had to run the risk of assassination on the part of those whose perquisites he has abolished. Many have been the plots to kill Lord Cromer, but they have been so invariably frustrated that it is now currently believed that he bears a charmed life. To-day he can walk the streets of Cairo as salely as those of London.

But the greatest work of Great Britain has been the restoration of prosperity to the masses of the people. Freed from oppression, relieved of taxation, and assisted in their undertakings, the Egyptians are now contented. The Nile has been brought under control, so that there is a regular supply of water for the pulyose of irrigation. Egypt has heem won back from the emcroaching desart. Even France has been convinced that British rule in Pharaoh's Land is a thing to be tolerated. And what does England gain by all this sacrifice? It has a boest secured entrance to a market which it has now thrown open to all the world. satisfy ye ath"

POWER IN DEAD LEAVES.

Phese and Kindred Materials, Re duced to Gas, Will Run Motors.

The use of dead leaves, straw or hay as a source of power is the latest contribution to practical science made by French experimenters. Henri de Par ville, writing in the Journal des De-bats, Paris, vouches for the truth of this announcement. The experiments are being carried on by M. S. Bordenase, who has found it possible to produce enough gas by the combustion of vegetable matter to run a small but serviceable motor. The different ma terials used were straw, leaves, hay, etc., compressed into bales. M. de Parville says the following results were obtained in practice: "With hay it was found that one horse power could be obtained by using a little over two pounds of combustible, which, being valued at 10 francs per ton, made the cost of each single horsepower .04 francs. With the labor and other accessories the cost of the horse-power was raised to .056 francs for each horsepower fer one hour. If the average quality of hay at a cost of S francs per ton be used the horsepower for one hour costs .076 francs.

"Wheat and oat straw may be used to greater advantage. Here the power is obtained with a little over two pounds of material. The value of the straw being estimated at 25 francs per ton, the cost of the horsepower is .063 francs. With oat straw the horsepow-er costs .057 francs. The experiments with leaves gave a horsepower at a cost of .043 francs, while the power was obtained with a mixture of sawdust and shavings at a cost of .05 francs. With other material the results were in every way satisfactory from both an industrial and financial

It is claimed by the experimenter that the new process will be particular-ly useful to farmers who are in need of small motors and have great quantities of refuse vegetable matter from which to obtain the power.—Translation in MAKING UP. Little Brother's Sorry After When little brother's sorry, At first he pouts awhile, And then about his dimpled mouth There grows a tiny smile.

He looks at sister sidewise,
And, cresping very near,
He offers her his rocking horse,
The toy he holds most dear!

MAKING UP.

But sister shakes her flaxen head.
"Why, then," he cries, "my kite?
My knife? My candy llon?
(I've only had one bite!)
You won't have any toys at all?
Why, then, I'll give you—this!
Because, you see, I'm sorry,
So, sister, take a kiss!"

PLAYING TURTLE.

A Game In Which Every One Is "It"

Any number may play the game of turtle, and no one player is "it," for all are "it" together. The game begins by each choosing the kind of turtle he intends to be. One perhaps is a land tortoise, another a snapper, another a mud turtle and so on. Then they all sit in a row, resting their chins on their knees, and each holding his left ankle with his right hand and his right ankle with his left hand. This is a very difficult position to keep. At a given signal the turtles start for a goal a short distance away.

It is the object of the game for the turtles to waddle to the goal and back to the starting point without removing their hands from their feet. Many let go before the proper moment; the oth-ers shout "dead turtle" and keep on, leaving their unfortunate companion in the background. The rules of the game demand that he wait there until the first successful racer reaches him on his way back and touches him with his elbow, by which he is supposed to instill new life into the poor dead turtle. The latter immediately starts out again and finishes in the best style out again and mishes in the best style he can. As there are always several dead turtles, he is never lonely in his effort to succeed. The winner is, of course, the one who returns to the starting place first.

Japanese Legend About an Insect. A curious tradition exists about a strange insect which is found only in H.meji, a pretty little town near the center of Japan. It seems there once lived a rich noble in a castle on the outskirts of the town who was famous for the magnificence of his dishes, among which were ten bowls of solid gold. In his employ was a maidserv-ant, O-Kiku, to whom was intrusted the care of the plate. One day a gold dish was missing. She searched diligently, but in vain, and in despair drowned herself in a well. Her ghost retuined each night to the spot and could be heard counting the dishes slowly with sobs, "Ichi-mai, ni-mai, tun-mai, yo-mai, go-mai, roku-mai, chichi-mai, ha-chi-mai, ku-mai," to nine, when there would follow a loud, wailing cry, and the uncanny count would begin over again. At last the uneasy spirit passed into the body of an insect whose head somewhat resembled a ghost with long, tousied hair, and in that was a specific part of the second somewhat resembled a ghost with long, tousied hair, and in that part of Japan it is considered un-lucky to cultivate the chrysanthemum, as the girl's name, O-Kiku, means

In the old mystic books of the ancients it is found that they believed in the power of precious stones to bring good fortune through planetary affini-ties of certain days. They imagined that gems as well as metals were profluced through the chemical operations of the planets working secretly in the body of the earth. Therefore certain stones must be worn on certain days of the week for good luck.
