 Are you always kind and true?
 Do you always do to others
 As you'd have them do to you?

MY LESSON STORY THIS WEEK.

“THERE my pet you're quite ready,” said nurse as she wrapped Daisy in a white fleecy shawl, and then they drove away to the party. Outside the house to which Daisy had been invited, stood some people to watch the little visitors arrive. Amongst others were a boy and a girl, poor little uncared for creatures, with faces pinched with hunger and cold. “Ain't she a beauty!” said the boy nudging his sister. “Beauty indeed” cried the girl angrily, “I don't like her!” and she shook her little fist at Daisy, who clung to her nurse in terror. “What do you mean frightening the little lady?” asked a butcher boy standing by. “I hate her and I hate you too,” said the child. Daisy's party was a success, and she ought to have enjoyed herself, but somehow above the laughing and music, she seemed to hear a shrill voice saying “I don't like you.” “Nurse why did that little girl say she did not like me” she asked when she was tucked in for the night in her cosy bed. “I don't know dearie unless it was that she was jealous because you are rich and she is poor, but forget about it and go to sleep.” Daisy did not forget about it and told her papa about the poor little girl and said, “I wish we could find her and give her something to make her happy.” Her papa told her he was afraid they could not find her, but next week he would take her to the hospital to see the children and let her bring some presents. As they went round from bed to bed, Daisy saw the face of the little girl who said “I don't like you.” She was surprised, but stopped, and picked out the loveliest dollie she had, and gave it to the little girl. Two big tears rolled down her cheeks as she said “I'm so sorry I said I did not like you, but I was terrible bad that night. I loves you now I do.”
