ADVICE FROM HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY

A Horticultural Society in Ontario gives the following advice in regard to leaves which are at present rapidly falling. Put them on your flower beds or garden. They make excellent fertilizer. Do not however leave them on your lawn as they would likely kill the grass. If you cannot obtain rich fertilizer for your tulip beds—gather your leaves now and when the frost comes, spread them about 3 inches deep over your tulips—as soon as ever frost is out of ground, take leaves off.

The Enchanted Dog

A Fairy Tale Written by Ruth S. Janneman, age 10 years, Queen Alexandra School.

(Continued from a preceding issue.) So the Prince walked on, and as he neared the mountain he saw many eagles flying around. It was made of pure glass. So he captured two eagles, and tied one foot on each arm and each leg, and at last fell asleep, tired and bleeding, with the claws dug into the glass.

After quite a while the Prince woke up and started climbing again. At last he got up the mountain, and entered the cave of Bellarous; and Bellarous was drinking a strange wine, thick like syrup, and when he caught sight of Durout the Prince said, "Why dost thou come here, but you will make a fine dinner for tomorrow, and I will have some friends in to dine with me."

"But Prince Durout said, "Rather, you will make a nice dinner."

"Very well," said Durout, the Prince. So the giant, Bellarous, pulled out a huge oak by its roots and turned it over Durout a fatal blow, but Durout was on the watch and saw him in time. He leapt aside and the giant turned to give him another blow, but Durout leapt aside again and escaped the blow; and he did this so long that the giant got tired and at last dropped down, and Durout cut off his head and put it in his bag with the three other heads and carried them all off once more in triumph.

Now the old man appeared again on the scene and said—well, what she said can be told in the next chapter.

Now the Prince followed the old man's instructions, killed Bellarous, and put his head in the bag the old man gave him.

Then he walked on and all of a sudden the old man appeared again, and told Durout the Prince to go into the giant's cave and bring out a little white dog; and so Durout brought the dog out, and so Durout made a perfect landing off the station.

Two brothers under five years of age were killed at Cleveland when a sand cave they built collapsed.

A New York waitress testified her salary was only $5, but her weekly income from tips amounted to $75.

your eyes when doing it." Durout did not like to do it, but the old man had been very wise so far. He closed his eyes tight and quickly cut off its head.

"Open your eyes," said the old man; so Durout did, and behold, there was no dog to be seen, but in its place stood a beautiful maiden. And she said, "You have saved me. The giant, Bellarous, enchanted me; turned me into a dog, and did not give me a bite to eat."

So Durout took her home and married her, and they lived happily ever after.
